EDUCATION SHAKE-UP BY JOSEPH

Exam reform and parent power

By JOHN IZBICKI Education Correspondent

WIDE-RANGING changes in education designed to give parents more influence, improve teaching and discipline and reform the examination system were outlined by Sir Keith Joseph, Education Secretary, yesterday.

In a 95-page White Paper, Sir Keith praised the work of most teachers but said that a "significant number" continued to perform at standards below those needed to reach their goals.

He proposes to extend his powers "in appropriate circumstances" to require local authorities "regularly to appraise the performance of their teachers."

The White Paper was given a mixed reception.

But after it was published one teachers' union leader described Sir Keith as "the most radical and important Secretary of State since Rab Butler," who produced the 1944 Education Act.

Wordsworth and word-processing

Sir Keith—who told M Ps last night that he wanted schools to teach Wordsworth and word-processing and "build on Britain's values and traditions and on its ethnic diversity"—proposes:

1 To legislate for a reform of school governing bodies to give parents a major—though not majority—voice and prevent local authorities packing boards with party political representatives.

2 To introduce a system of grants specifically for local authorities to spend on better in-service training for teachers. Until now, authorities have been requested to spend such grants on specific purposes but not forced to do so.

3 To introduce a new examination to replace O-levels and the C S E and give very every child a chance to reach required standards in accordance with ability and promote a proper measurement of achievement based on what candidates know, understand and can do.

4 To introduce another new examination, the Advanced Supplementary (AS) level which will allow sixth-formers to broaden their knowledge with science candidates to take arts subjects and arts candidates to study science subjects.

It will be worth half an A-level and take up half as much study time. The qualification has already been recognised by higher education institutions for admission purposes alongside A-levels.

Sir Keith also intends to improve the curriculum so that subjects are more closely geared to the needs of society and the world of work.

He also proposes to tackle the growing problems of indiscipline and truancy.

In an exclusive interview with THE DAILY TELEGRAPH, Sir Keith said yesterday that a minority of parents failed to value education, possibly because they had not benefited from it themselves.

"As a result they don't do the things that children and schools need if they are to function properly—they don't read to their children, they don't talk to their children, they don't encourage their children to try at school. They don't support the school and in extreme cases connive at truancy," he said.

Mr Peter Smith, deputy general secretary of the 95,000-strong Assistant Masters and Mistresse Aociation, said last night: "History will show Sir Keith Joseph to have been the most radical and important Secretary of State since Rab Butler."

But, he added, history might also show Sir Keith as having committed "one critical error" by suggesting that the education service would be improved "despite teachers rather than because of them."

Claiming that the teaching unions were already in fundamental agreement with teacher appraisal, Mr Smith said: "One would wish Sir Keith wasn't so frequently the midwife who supervised the abortion of consensus."

'Fewer basic resources'

Mr Fred Jarvis, general secretary of the 235,000-member National Union of Teachers, welcomed the White Paper's section on examinations, in-service training and school governors but deplored "the fact that Sir Keith expects teachers to do far more with fewer basic resources." This he said, "defied belief."

The general secretary of the 127,000-strong Schoolmasters and Women Teachers union, Mr Fred Smithies, warned Sir Keith that the changes he seeks and "which we all agree are necessary," could not be achieved without the necessary cash.

12 DIE IN BISCAY STORM

By GERALD BARTLETT

THE captain and seven sail-training cadets were missing, feared drowned, and another youth died on a liferaft yesterday, after their tall ship, Pirata, capsized and sank in mountainess seas in the Bay of Biscay.

A 100ft. twin-masted schooner she was sailing under storm canvas when an immense wave threw her on her side off Estaca de Bares, Spain, and overwhelmed her in seconds, according to survivors' reports.

Two cadets and the captain's wife, Mrs Barbra Heusser, were snatched from 40ft waves by the crew of a Basque fishing boat, the Andra Mari. They were due to be landed at La Coruna late last night.

A further four were feared to have died in Biscay when the 75ft West German motor yacht, Bium, sank off Ribadesella, near Gijon, in northern Spain.

The Biscay emergency began late on Monday as a series of depressions swept across the north Spanish coast. The wooden-built Pirata was sailing from Falmouth to Setubal with 10 Swiss cadets, and the German captain and his wife.

JOBS TO GO AT EXPRESS NEWSPAPERS

Express Newspapers, shortly expected to be the subject of a takeover bid by United Newspapers, has announced plans for a "manning review" in editorial departments to shed nearly 40 jobs.

The group is understood to be seeking a reduction of 12 editorial jobs on the DAILY EXPRESS in London and 18 on the EXPRESS in Manchester. A further eight jobs on the DAILY STAR are also said to be at risk, although the cutback could not be confirmed by the company yesterday. No agreement has been reached with the National Union of Journalists.

On Monday a takeover bid for Fleet Holdings, the Express parent group, was announced by United Newspapers, owners of Punch, the Yorkshire post and other regional newspapers, so long as approval for the move is given by Mr Tebbit, Trade and Industry Secretary.

Moscow defends 'tragic' shooting

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

MOSCOW yesterday called the killing of an American army officer by a Russian guard in East Germany "tragic" and "regrettable," but said the sentry "had to" shoot.

Responsibility for the incident "lies fully on the American side, which is now circulating a deliberately false version of what happened," said the official Soviet news agency, Tass.

The Tas acount was the first Soviet press raeference to the shooting, 43 hours earlier, of Maj. Arthur Nicholson, who was attached to the United States military liaison mission which was set up in East Germany after the 1939-45 war.

camouflage gear who had secretly approached a storage building, opened a window and taken pictures.

"Acting in strict compliance with military regulatons, the sentry demanded n Rusian and German that the stranger stop. When the latter failed to comply and tried to flee, the sentry fired a warning shot in the air.

"Since the introdure did not stop even after this, the sentry had to use his weapon. He fired and killed the intruder."

Tass said: "The tragic outcome of what happened is regrettable." But it accused the United States of a flagrant violation of a 1947 agreement on military liaison missions. The Soviet Embassy in Washington had lodged a strong protest.

Western diplomats said the Tass account was unyielding on Moscow's version of events, but its use of the words "tragic" and "regrettable" suggested the Kremlin leadership did not want the affair to disrupt hopes for an improvement in Soviet-American relations.

Diplomats said Mr Borbachev, the new Kremlin leader, would have to appear to be "standing up to the Americans," while at the same time avoiding damage.

RUSSIA BUGS U.S. EMBASSY SECRETS

By Our Washington Staff

The Russians were able to monitor highly classified American documents through tiny tarnsmitting devices hidden in typewriters in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, officials said yesterday.

For more than a year up to 1984, the "bugs" were able to transmit what was being written to receivers embedded in the Embassy walls, which retransmitted it to antennae on nearby buildings.

Officials said the "bugs" might still be in use had the embassy not been tipped off by a friendly government which had been subjected to a similar eavesdropping attempt.

No. 10 PLANS BATCH OF LIFE PEERS

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Staff

CREATION of a new batch of "working peers" to strengthen both the Government and Opposition teams in the House of Lords is expected to be announced from Downing Street within the next fortnight.

Mrs Thatcher has agreed to further life peerages being created in response to appeals from Labour that its own contingent in the Upper House is becoming too sparse and elderly to function as an effective Opposition.

But she has stuck to her customary insistence that as fresh peerages for the Opposition alone would upset the balance in the Lords, a larger number of Conservatives should be appointed to maintain it.

The Liberals and the S D P, as well as Labour, are understodd to have submitted nominations for life peerages to Downing Street. Up to now Mrs Thatcher has agreed to the ennoblement of the occasional Liberal, but has offered the Social Democrats nothing.

The size of the new list of life peers will hinge on how successful Mr Kinnock has been in persuading Mrs Thatcher to accept his nominations, most of which are of Labour M Ps unseated at the last election.

300 held in Cape protest

By Christopher Munnion in Johannesburg

MORE than 300 people, including several church leaders, were arrested in Cape Town yesterday during a demonstration of sympathy for the 19 blacks shot dead by police in Langa township last week.

A multi-racial crowd was marching to present a five-point protest about township violence to Parliament, when police intervened and told them the gathering was illegal.

When most of the marchers decided to ignore the warning, police reinforcements arrived and violent scuffles broke out as demonstrators were bundled into police vans.

Memorial service

Among those arrested were the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and Dr Beyers Naude, secretary-general of the South African Council of Churches.

Many of those arrested refused to pay £25 bail and elected to spend the night in cells. Earlier, most of the demonstraters had attended a memorial service in a Cape Town Methodist church.

Mr Boesak and Dr Naude had been refused permission to enter the troubled townships of Langa and Kwanobuhle in the Eastern Cape where 52 people have died violently since last Thursday.

Police used tear gas on six occasions to break up roaming mobs of up to 400 people apparently bent on vengeance against other blacks accused of collaboration with the government or unspecified "crimes against the people."

Opposition M Ps yesterday challenged the police version of the Langa shooting, saying they had sworn affidavits that the police had opened fire without warning on an unarmed funeral procession.

Police have said that they were surrounded by a mob carrying sticks, stones and petrol bombs and opened fire in self-defence after warning shots had been ignored.

RECORD FLOW OF FOREIGN BUSINESS

By Our Business Correspondent

A record number of 285 foreign firms decided to set up operations in Britain or expand existing businesses last year, creating 28,125 jobs and safeguarding another 18,000, Mr Tebbit, Trade and Industry Secretary, said yesterday.

He told the London launch of a campaign to encourage more fioreign firms to move to Britain that foreign investment last year totalled almost £5 billion.

"We are regarded as the preferred location in Europe for inward investment by both American and Japanese firms," he added.

Motorists with cellular car telephones were advised yesterday not to "dial and drive." Mrs Lynda Chalker, Transport Minister, said in a Commons written reply that drivers with in-car telephones should pull over and stop before making or receiving a call.

Miners reject levy to help sacked men

By DAVID GRAVES

MINERS have voted against the idea of a 50p-a-week levy to support the 620 men sacked during the year-long strike. The result of the pithead ballot was: 50,429 (46 per cent.) in favour, and 58,721 (54 per cent.) against.

Only 109,150, less than 60 per cent. of the 186,000 men entitled to vote, took part in the ballot, which resulted in the fourth rebuff for Mr Scargill and his Left-wing colleagues in a national poll since he won the presidency of the union in 1981.

The result was interpreted as a vote of no confidence in the N U M executive's proposal to continue the dispute over pit closures despite ending the strike.

It will inevitably add to the pressure on the 24-man N U M executive to call for an end to the 16-month overtime ban at tomorrow's crucial meeting in Sheffield.

Mr Scargill was in Moscow when the result was announced having discussions with Soviet miners' leaders, which drew protests from Mr Ted MacKay, moderateleader of the North Wales miners, who said the visit was "deplorable."

Tactical mistake

The majority against the levy would have been even greater had the three main moderate areas, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire and South Derbyshire, not boycotted the ballot.

Voting figures for individual areas were not available, but the barometer coalfields of North Derbyshire and Lancashire were understood to have voted against.

Miners in North Yorkshire were also thought to have cast their votes 60-40 against, and men in the Selby coalfield also rejected the idea.

The ballot had been regarded

U.S. and EEC 'cash aid for Irish peace'

By JAMES WIGHTMAN Political Correspondent

SIR Geoffrey Howe, Foreign Secretary, has expressed support for the possibility of the E E C and the United States providing backing for any agreement on Northern Ireland arising out of the present Anglo-Irish talks.

He did so in an interview with the Dublin-based IRISH TIMES amid continuing controversy over the British Government's talks with the Irish Government about Ulster.

Dublin visit

The report of the interview said that the Irish Government was believed to have suggested to Britain a Marshall Aid-type plan, with funding from America and the E E C countries, "to support a major initiative on Northern Ireland and also to provide an external guarantee to under-pin an Anglo-Irish agreement."

Sir Geoffrey was quoted as saying: "It will be some time yet before we know whether the discussions which have been taking place will lead to practical results, and, if they do, I'm sure we would hope that our partners in the community and elsewhere would look favourably on any such practical results."

Sir Geoffrey and Mr Hurd, Northern Ireland Secretary, went to Dublin last Friday for talks with Irish ministers.

Two days later there were reports in some newspapers that the Prime Minister was moving towards an historic agreement with the Dublin Government about the future of Northern Ireland. But 10 Downing St immediately reacted with the comment that the reports were "grossly overblown."

BIFFEN PLEDGE 'Constitution safe'

Mr Biffen, Leader of the Commons, last night answered Ulster Unionist fears by restating the Government's commitment to the constitutional position of Northern Ireland, which had existed for more than two decades and "no more powerfully than on the lips of the Prime Minister."

Mr James Molyneaux, leader of the Official Unionists, had said that the Government's recent discussions with the Irish government might imperil pledges on the future of the province.

CBI FEARS OF RAPID SLIDE INTO ANARCHY

By ROLAND GRIBBEN Business Correspondent

BRITAIN will suffer higher levels of unemployment and lower living standards unless there is a radical change in attitudes from the shop floor to Government, the Confederation of British Industry said yesterday.

"The pace of change is now so manifestly rapid that the decline could be speedy and possibly violent, bringing social upheaval and leaving a legacy only of decay and disruption to our children," it declared.

In human terms it would mean "distress and blighted lives for a great many more people and very much curtailed ability to be a 'caring society'."

The bleak comments are made in a discussion document produced to encourage debate among industrial leaders and produce a business strategy to cover the next decade.

The CBI hopes to unveil the "industrial manifesto" at its annual conference at Harrogate in November, and use it as a basis for talks with the Government, unions and businessmen.

'Spirit of realism'

Key economic and social questions are raised in the report, which starts from the premise that the "new spirit of realism" in the country, produced by the Government over the last five years, can provide the starting point for changes to help Britain catch up with the leaders of the industrialised world.

"A revival of enterprise has occurred, even ignoring the black economy, new and small businesses are increasing in numbers and the number of self-employed is growing rapidly," the report says.

Substantial improvements have been achieved in the fields of efficiency, quality, design and delivery dates, while trade union legislation, lower taxes and the removal of controls on prices, dividends, pay and foreign exchange movements have made the economy more flexible.

The document urges greater flexibility in the Government's medium term financial strategy to cope with the prospect of lower growth in the years ahead, and criticises the way the public sector borrowing requirement has become a "totem."

Industrialists are asked to consider whether they should campaign for Parliamentary reform that would provide a bigger business input, examine the case for proportional representation, or a Bill of Rights.

There are renewed calls for a cut in Government-imposed business costs. The recent rise in water charges is attacked as a "disguised form of taxation," while the "remorseless" growth in regulatory controls has to be checked and rolled back — if need be by a "self-denying ordinance by government."

'Sun' returns as dispute is settled

By TERENCE SHAW
Legal Correspondent

PRODUCTION of the SUN was resumed last night after settlement of the dispute which had stopped the newspaper and its stable companion, the NEWS OF THE WORLD, since Tuesday last week.

A return-to-work formula was agreed at talks on Monday between senior directors of News Group Newspapers and national and local officials of the two unions involved, Sogat 82 and the National Graphical Association.

The dispute arose over a high number of printing plate breaks which the unions regarded as a serious safety hazard but which the company claimed were due to "operator failure."

The company also believed the unrest was linked with the plans to move printing from Fleet Street to a £32 million plant at Tower Hamlets.

Joint examination

Last Sunday a High Court judge granted emergency injunctions against the unions and 10 of their officials restraining them from nducing breaches of their members contracts of employment, interfering with the publisher's business and ordering the unions to withdraw strike instructions.

Announcing the return-to-work formula, a company spokesman said the problem of plate breaks in the machine room, the original cause of the stoppage, would be the subject of joint examination by the company, Sogat and the NGA.

Settlement of the dispute was announced after a High Court judge had granted an adjournment until tomorrow of an application by Sogat and four of its officials to discharge the injunctions against them.

After a brief private hearing in the Law Courts in London, Mr Justice STUART-SMITH granted the adjournment after being told that talks on a settlement were nearing a successful conclusion. The NGA had not joined in Sogat's application to have the injunctions lifted.

In addition to the injunctions which News Group Newspapers obtained against the two unions and their officials on Sunday, it has also served writs on them claiming damages for its lost production. If the actions were successful, it could result in damages of up to £250,000 being awarded against each union.

CASH-ROW NUJ CHIEF TO RETIRE

By STEPHEN WARD
Industrial Staff

DELEGATES to the National Union of ournalists' annual conference were told yesterday that the terms agreed for the early retirement of the general secretary, Mr Ken Ashton, will cost the union £55,000.

A report from the executive read to the 400 delegates in a private session confirmed that Mr Ashton, 59, will retire on June 30. Until then he will be on paid leave.

His early departure from his job, which has a normal retiring age of 65, follows an internal inquiry into an enhanced pension negotiated by Mr Ashton and the union's finance officer, Mr Niranjan Paik.

Mr Jaik has been completely cleared and continues in his job. Mr Ashton was sent on paid leave in November, which has lasted almost continuously since.

Disciplinary proceedings within the NUJ are continuing against five lay union officials who were members of the committee which approved the enhanced pensions in late 1983.

Conflict of interest

Under the terms of the settlement with Mr Ashton passed by the NUJ executive by 14votes to six last week, he will receive a lump sum of £44,560—two years' salary—and a pension equivalent to his entitlement under the original pension arrangements had he retired at 62.

The statement read to the conference said the executive accepted that "Mr Ashton did not act with the intention of defrauding the union, nor did he defraud the union."

But he had "allowed himself to be placd in th position of having a conflict of interest between his position as general secretary and beneficiary of the proposed pension augmentation."

ELTON REPLACES AVON

By NICHOLAS COMFORT
Political Staff

LORD ELTON, 55, previously a junior Home Office minister, was yesterday promoted to Minister of State for the Environment with the brief of getting the Government's bill to abolish the GLC and the six metropolitan counties through the Lords.

He takes over from the Earl of Avon, 54, who has tendered his resignation as Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Environment on health grounds.

The Abolition Bill, which is due to complete its progress through the Commons tomorrow, is widely seen as posing considerable problems for the Government in the Lords, which last year emasculated its "Paving Bill" on the same issue.

Risky assignment

Lord Elton will have only a few weeks to prepare for his highly technical and politcally risky assignment before Peers begin consideration of the measure after the Easter recess.

Mrs Thatcher has made a couple of further changes to the ministerial team in the Lords following the departure of Lord Avon and Lord Elton's promotion. Lord Glenarthur moves from the Department of Health to become Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the Home Office and Baroness Trumpington moves from the Whips' office to become Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the Department of Health and Social Security.

News Round-up

INMOS, the microchip-maker, is to cut wages and working hours by 20 per cent. to save jobs at its plant in Newport, South Wales, but the company has promised there will be no redundancies among the 900 workforce.

Plans to recruit a further 600 at a second factory in the town have been suspended after a world slump in the silicon chip market.

The cutbacks begin with the workforce taking a week-long break after the Easter Bank Holiday and a halt on full-time weekend working. Union officials say some workers could lose £100 a month.

Inmos, launched as Britain's standard bearer in computer technology with £100 million of public money, has a no-strike, one-union agreement with the electricians' union the EEPTU, and it is thought unlikely the union will oppose the plan.

QUIT CALL TO POLICE CHIEF

By STANLEY GOLDSMITH

MR KENNETH OXFORD, 60, the controversial Chief Constable of Merseyside, was yesterday asked to retire by the Left-wing police authority with whom he has been at odds for the past four years.

Mrs Margaret Simey, 79, police committee chairman, said that his failure to notify them in advance of his recent trip to a counter-terrorism conference in America was "the last straw."

Although it was disclosed that Mr Oxford was instructed to attend the conference by the Government, the committee resolved that he should "consider retiring in the interest of efficiency." They will meet to hear his answer in four weeks.

Eight members of the committee, Tories, Liberals and magistrates, voted against the decision at the end of the 90-minute private meeting. Some of them said the resolution was "pathetic" and "disgusting"

DECISION TO FREE TRIMBOLE 'CORRECT'

A judge's decision to free Robert Trimbole, the suspected Australian crime boss, from an Irish jail was correct, the Irish Republic's Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

The five judges agreed that the High Court had been right to order Trimbole's release from Mountjoy Jail in Dublin after more than three months in custody.

Trimbole, 53, was arrested in Dublin on Oct 25 last year and held under an anti-terrorist law.

State profit on sale of Yarrow yard 'too big'

By JOHN PETTY Shipping Correspondent

THE former owners of the Yarrow shipyard in the Government of making an extortionate profit by selling it to General Electric Company for £34 million.

The original owners of Yarrow were paid only £6 million when the yard was nationalised in 1977. It was profitable then and has made profits of £70 million for the State in the intervening years.

The old Yarrow company is still fighting for more compensation and is pursuing its case in Common Market courts.

Conservative leaders accused Labour of giving insufficient compensation at the time of nationalisation, but refused to change the amount when the Tories came to power.

Yarrow was valued at £17 million when nationalised. Plans announced this week to sell the yard to G E C "further illustrate the injustice which Yarrow and its many shareholders have suffered at the hands of successive governments,' said a statement by the company now known as Yarrow Public.

Union leaders also attacked the deal, claiming it breached an agreement with British Shipbuilders that they would get three weeks to reach a deal with any buyer before the sale was concluded.

"Mr Tebbit and his gang of cut-throats have sold us like a flock of sheep," said Mr Douglas Conroy, convener of the Yarrow shop stewards.

DARTMOOR DEAL

Renewal of the seven-year licence to use parts of Dartmoor for military training has been agreed between the Defence Ministry and the Duchy of Cornwall. After 1991 the Duchy will wish to consider if live firing should continue.

SCRIPTURE CLUE DESTROYED EVIL IN THE CHAPEL

By GEORGE TURNBULL

A HOMOSEXUAL Methodist minister who mutilated the bodies of male corpses as they lay in their coffins in his tiny Welsh chapel the night before burial was jailed for four years yesterday.

The hideous secret of 62-year-old EMYR OWEN — "enough to turn the stomach," a judge said — only came to light when he started writing poison pen letters, and a dogged detective identified the handwriting through the inscription on a New Testament given to a parishioner by Owen.

Owen had been minister of Bethel Calvanist chapel in the little resort of Tywyn — between Aberystwyth and Barmouth — since 1976.

Between September and December last year police were investigating a spate of poison pen letters in the area, Chester Crown Court was told yesterday by Mr HUW DANIEL, prosecuting.

One, sent to an elderly woman with an ailing husband, threatened to murder one of her grandchildren.

"Tell your daughter-in-law to watch the little filthy bastard she has in the house," it said.

A feature of the handwriting was an unusual letter "T". Det. Con. GWYN ROBERTS examined between 5,000 and 6,000 writing specimens from local people.

"As a result of his hard work and dedication to his job he was rewarded, eventually, by a stroke of luck," said Mr Daniel. "On December 19, he was shown a New Testament with writing on the inside cover which he immediately recognised."

Det. Con. Gwyn Roberts — studied 6,000 handwriting samples.

It had been given by Owen to a local farmer after his confirmation. Three days before Christmas the 41-year-old detective went to see Owen at his terraced manse in Maethlon Close.

Owen at first said: "May the good Lord strike you dead. I have not written such letters, never." But then he owned up.

"Whilst I threatened to kill the granddaughter, obviously I had no intention of carrying out this threat, or of in any way harming the child. I am at a total loss why I sent these letters — a total loss," he confessed.

Mr Daniel said Det. Con. Roberts's instincts told him there was "something very peculiar" in the house, and Owen gave him permission to search.

The detective found a mass of literature and pictures involving sadism and masochism, and, in a box of photographic slides, he discovered a picture of a man's severed genitals.

Owen claimed it was post mortem slide, but then admitted that he had taken it himself, and produced knives and surgical instruments he had bought while he was a minister in Liverpool between 1965 and 1972.

He admitted severing the private parts of three bodies. Tape recordings he had made in English and Welsh were discovered, giving a detailed description of similar mutilations of bodies in coffins, three of them in his chapel awaiting burial.

"A further male body was mutilated in that way, but he described how he turned the body over in its coffin and beat it on the buttocks with straps and then used electric fire bars to burn the buttocks," said Mr Daniel.

"It was only when he came to Tywyn that he had access to bodies awaiting burial. Before that they had been kept by undertakers.

"He told police he had long nursed a fantasy about the cutting off of male genitalia. He told them he had two personalities—one the caring priest, and another known as 'Emyr Ddrwg' or 'Emyr the Bad'.

"He claimed he had returned the sexual organs to their coffins before burial, but this was a lie. He had experimented with these organs, photographing them and disposing of them after the burial in various ways."

Fiery serpents

Owen was jailed for 2½ years for mutilating the three corpses and 18 months consecutively for the poison pen letter. He pleaded guilty.

A bachelor of mild outward eccentricities he always wore platform shoes, and his blue Fiat 127 car was decorated with three transfers of flame-breathing serpents—to hide scratches, he would claim.

Now some of his parishioners wonder if there was a more evil significance.

Born in Blaenau Ffestiniog, he worked as a saw sharpener in a slate quarry before becoming ordained. He served at churches in Llangybi, near Lampeter, Dyfed; Coventry; Liverpool; and Beddgelert, Snowdonia, before going to Tywyn.

During his eight years there he conducted some 200 funerals.

Sin of alcohol

Dr William Lawson, chief medical officer at Risley remand centre, said there was no evidence of mental illness as such, but Owen had doubts about his religion.

Usually when this happened to a minister he hit the bottle, but to a Welsh Calvinist, alcohol was a considerable sin.

Mr GEOFFREY KILFOIL, defending, said Owen had had a Jekyll and Hyde personality since his teens.

"He has found his God as a terrible and avenging God, and He has put him in dread. He is in grave doubt as to whether he will ever be forgiven."

Stepfather blames Jasmine's death on her mother

By HEATHER MILLS Old Bailey Correspondent

THE stepfather accused of beating four-year-old Jasmine Lorrington to death, after 10 months of cruelty and torture, blamed the child's mother for her fatal injuries at the Old Bailey yesterday.

MAURICE "Rocky" BECKFORD told the jury that the night before Jasmine died he saw her mother, BEVERLY LORRINGTON, "strangling" the child.

And in a surprise move after his accusation, Lorrington, 24, changed her pleas on two charges of child cruelty from not guilty to guilty.

The jury was then discharged by the judge from returning a verdict on a third charge of cruelty relating to the day Jasmine died.

Jasmine — weighing only 1st 9lb — had 40 head injuries — some fatal — and 20 broken bones when examined by a pathologist.

Up to the time of her death, she was in the care of the London borough of Brent, but Beckford and Lorrington "hoodwinked" social workers, preventing them from seeing her during the last months of her life, the court was told.

Electric shock

Rocking backwards and forwards in the witness box, BECKFORD, a West Indian, told the jury of six men and six women that on the night before Jasmine's death he saw Beverly "with her hands round Jasmine's neck, strangling her. I pulled her off."

He said that the next morning Jasmine was crying. "It must have been from the beating she got from Beverly.

When he came back from work he smoked a marijuana cigarette then went upstairs and found Jasmine dead.

He said he gave her an electric shock to try to revive her. "I got a plug and fuse on a lead and I gave her a shock round the heart," he told the jury.

Rockford, who has admitted two charges of cruelty and two of assault, said he only told police he had killed the child on July 5 last year to protect his common-law wife.

Asked why he had now changed his mind about taking the blame, he said it was because Lorrington had "cut him off" after she was freed on bail from prison. She had not replied to his letters.

He was then shown the letters he had sent to Lorrington.

In them he said: "When Jasmine was around, we could not enjoy any form of happiness. She made it difficult for us.

"I just pray to God to forgive, and hope He can forgive my sin."

However, Beckford said that comment related to his failure to get proper treatment for a broken thigh Jasmine suffered before she died, not to killing her.

Earlier, detectives told the court that Beckford had begged them to shoot him when questioned about Jasmine's death. He is alleged to have told them: "She drove me crazy, she drove me crazy man. I just want to die. I did it, I killed her. I killed her man."

The case was adjourned until today.

Land's End £1·50 entry fee is dropped

By ROBERT BEDLOW Estates Correspondent

THE Welsh property millionaire who bought Land's End for £2,250,000 has agreed to drop his £1·50 entrance fee to the headland to avoid a costly High Court action over a right of way claimed by two local authorities.

Visitors will be admitted free to Land's End under an experimental deal between Mr David Goldstone and Cornwall County and Penwith District Councils.

The councils had issued a writ against Mr Goldstone's Daystone Holdings, claiming that a right of way runs from the end of the A30 to the edge of the headland. The agreement is expected to avoid this litigation

The dispute arose in 1982, when Mr Goldstone began a £1 million improvement scheme at Land's End and announced the entry fee. He insisted that public access by coast path to the headland, visited by more than one million people a year, was unaltered.

Magistrate scraps UDA protection racket case

By COLIN BRADY in Belfast

A POLICE attempt to smash an alleged Ulster Defence Association protection racket on Belfast building sites collapsed yesterday when a magistrate ordered three defendants to be freed because prosecution witnesses refused to identify themselves.

The witnesses wore anoraks with the hoods pulled up and woollen covers wrapped around their faces to protect their identities.

The Belfast magistrates court hearing to decide if the defendants should go for trial involved three men accused of 53 offences connected with extortion, demanding money with menaces, attempted blackmail and possession of firearms on building sites in Belfast, South Down and North Antrim over three years.

The defendants were: JAMES PRATT CRAIG, 43; DAVID FEE, 51, and JOHN QUEE, 26, all from West Belfast.

Five disguised company directors told the court the previous day of being offered a bogus "protection" service

Other unidentified witnesses, also alleging harassment, were scheduled to give evidence in court yesterday but the case was withdrawn by the prosecution.

Counsel for the Department of Public Prosecutions said: "Having considered the proceedings in court yesterday and the fact that no witness felt able to provide his name, the DPP has concluded that the prosecution cannot ask for the return for trial for any of the defendants on any charges against them."

RAPE VICTIM REFUSES TO TESTIFY

By TIM BROWN in Barcelona

THE refusal of a young housewife from West Sussex to return to Spain to give evidence against three men who allegedly raped her in front of her husband and baby son 17 months ago has left the court with the problem of how to deal with the case.

Yesterday a judge at Gerona, the regional capital on the Costa Brava, suspended the hearing and sent two brothers, Francisco and Felipe Moreno, and the third members of the alleged gang, Jose Salinas, back to prison while the court considers whether to try to persuade the woman to reconsider.

They face 10 charges of robbery with rape and four other charges of rape. The three have already escaped from prison while awaiting trial but were recaptured.

The police via the British Consulate sent photographs of the three men to the woman's home in Sussex and she marked the pictures of her alleged attackers with an X.

However, her husband rejected a request by the prosecution for her to return to Spain and give evidence because he feared it could damage her health and mind if she had to meet her attackers again.

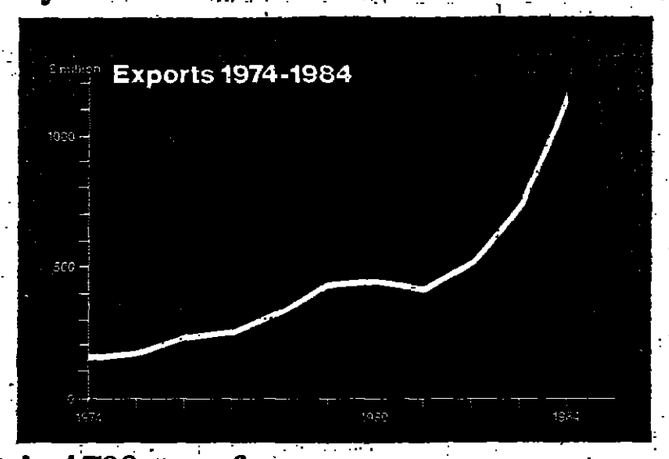
Update on IBM, March 1985. No.3

IBM exports take off.

In five years, IBM has climbed from Britain's 14th largest exporter to 6th position.* Exports last year were £1,175 million—an increase of 58% in one year alone.



IBM UK exports Information Technology equipment to customers in Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

This export success helps maintain 4,700 manufacturing jobs in Greenock, Scotland and Havant, Hampshire, which together export 85% of their production — including the best selling IBM Personal Computer.

OVER 1,300 NEW JOBS

IBM's export success is a major factor in the company's continued employment expansion: 1,380 new jobs were created at IBM last year. IBM UK now employs over 17,500 people.

INVESTING MORE THAN TWO MILLION POUNDS A WEEK

IBM's exports also contribute to profits, much of which are then re-invested in Britain.

Capital expenditure in 1984 was £149 million, and included investment in manufacturing expansion.

That's a rate of £2.8 million a week.

SUPPORTING JOBS AMONGST SUPPLIERS

IBM uses UK suppliers wherever possible. By doing so, the company estimates it has either created, or at least sustains, 8,000 supplier jobs in Britain.

WHY EXPORTS MATTER TO BRITAIN

The growth in demand for Information Technology is turning Britain into a major importer of IT supplies.

The NEDC reported that the 1983 balance of trade deficit for the UK was at least £800 million, and possibly as high as £2,000 million. In contrast, IBM invests where it does business and has historically kept an approximate balance between its exports and imports.

Information Technology is an industry in which IBM has shown that UK manufacturing can compete successfully. If our British suppliers can seize the opportunity which IBM's growth in the UK provides, we'll do even better.

60-DAY OFFER TO NATO ON SPACE ARMS

By Air Cdre G. S. COOPER Defence Staff in Luxembourg

AMERICA has given its Nato Allies and four other countries 60 days in which to declare their willingness to participate in President Reagan's Strategic Defence Initiative research.

Mr Caspar Weinberger, the American Defence Secretary, formally announced the invitation on space weapons research in Luxembourg yesterday at the start of Nato's Nuclear Planning Group meeting.

He stressed that no commitment to subsequent deployment of a strategic shield system was necessary at this stage.

A letter handed to each of the defence ministers present invited them to respond by identifying areas of technology in which their industries could best contribute to the research programme.

A senior American official said the purpose behind Mr Weinberger's initiative was to generate a survey of western research and industrial capability applicable to defence against short-range missile systems, as well as long-range intercontinental and submarine-launched ballistic missiles.

Short time to reply

The short time given for countries to respond was "to urge a large research programme as expeditiously as possible," the official added.

France, Japan, Australia and Israel were the four non-Nato countries also invited to participate in S D I research.

When the areas of technology interest deemed most promising to each country had been identified, defence ministers would be invited to initiate discussion with America on a bilateral basis.

The Americans are looking in particular to Britain, West Germany and France for help in areas where their industries are recognised to be far advanced in the necessary technology, with some companies "on the leading edge" in certain useful areas.

Leakage to Russians

But difficulties are foreseen in overcoming security problems affecting the transfer of such technology.

The Americans expect to have to institute more than the usual means of protection to prevent leakage of vital information to the Russians.

Mr Weinberger's announcement received a broad expression of support from defence ministers at the Luxembourg meeting, with unanimous agreement on the need to continue the SDI research programme.

Underlying this support was the clear understanding that SDI is only to be regarded as a research programme at this stage.

Although there were many questions about deployment, these did not need to be answered until the feasibility study showed more clearly whether deployment was worthwhile.

Britain to respond

Mr Heseltine, Defence Secretary, said after the meeting that Britain would be responding to Mr Weinberger's indications, which would be given urgent consideration.

"We have already indicated that we believe the research programme should go ahead, particularly as the Soviets are undoubtedly deeply involved in their own research into strategic defence," he said.

Mr Heseltine said he was not surprised that a quick response was called for. To reach agreement over a wide field, there was a very powerful argument for a tight schedule.

Defence ministers as a whole agreed that Nato's current strategy of deterrence remained valid, but that research into strategic defence systems was needed to help the American position in the Geneva arms talks.

Stockpile to be cut

Meanwhile, Gen. Bernard Rogers, Supreme Allied Commander Europe, told the meeting that all atomic demolition munitions were to be withdrawn from Nato's battlefield nuclear stockpile.

In response to the Nuclear Planning Group's 1983 Montebello decision that the stockpile should be cut from 6,000 to 4,600 weapons, Gen. Rogers said his study showed that Nato could cut the total to a "little bit below" that level.

But he gave a warning that if the reduced number of nuclear weapons was to be effective, there had to be a continuing programme of modernisation, with particular emphasis on survivability and security.

Glad-to-go Israelis regret leaving such good military bases

By CON COUGHLIN with the Israeli Defence Force in South Lebanon

THE snowcapped peaks of Jabal Barouk in south Lebanon provide the Israelis with one of the most important strategic bases in the Middle East.

They have a vantage point at the top of the 700ft range.

From it they can keep a more than watchful eye on the warring militias in Beirut and the entire deployment of the Syrian Army both at home and in occupied Lebanon.

In the neighbouring valley, where their northernmost positions are situated at Soultan Yeacoub, Israeli Centurion tank crews are eyeball-to-eyeball with the Syrians.

From there it is just 15 miles to Damascus, the Syrian capital—a fact believed by the Israelis to have largely influenced the Syrians not to meddle with them. Israeli military chiefs reckon that, given the order, they could be in Damascus within hours.

But within 10 weeks the Israeli defence forces will be gone from key strategic positions such as these, and the Syrian Army, driven out during some of the fiercest battles of the 1982 invasion, will be back.

While there may not be one Israeli soldier who wants to remain in Lebanon, there will be more than a passing regret at parting with bases that are a strategist's dream.

A visit to the front line yesterday showed work already well-advanced to dismantle bases in south Lebanon and ship all the valuable equipment back to Israel.

Round the clock

The narrow winding roads connecting Israel with what the military planners in Tel Aviv call the "eastern sector" are congested with a practically continuous stream of convoys carrying dismantling equipment to the front and returning with tanks, armoured personnel carriers, prefabricated buildings, and a variety of materials.

In the lower-lying areas, where there has been no snow for nearly a month, whole bases are being dismantled and the equipment removed within a matter of days.

Despite the acceleration of the operation because of the mounting effectiveness of terrorist attacks, the whole exercise is being carried out extremely efficiently—an indication of the military authorities' wholehearted approval of the Israeli Government's policy.

Up in the Jabal Barouk mountains, where most of the roads were snowbound until last week, work has only just begun. Workmen there face working round the clock, with the aid of floodlights at night, if they are to meet the mid-May deadline on which Israel seems to have settled for completing the withdrawal from south Lebanon.

They have to dismantle one of Israel's most secret military bases. Some of Israel's most sophisticated listening and communications equipment is installed in the mountains.

While the withdrawal operation gains momentum the main concern of the soldiers is what is going to happen to this vitally strategic area once they have left.

This was the area from which in the past Palestinian guerrillas, with the complicity of the Syrian Army, launched deadly rocket attacks on north Israeli settlements in Galilee.

The Palestinians have gone only to be replaced by Shi'ite Moslem extremists, who have waged a highly effective guerrilla campaign against the retreating Israeli Army.

But military chiefs believe the Shi'ites are interested only in regaining control of Lebanese soil, not in Israel.

The Shi'ite Moslem community, which suffered badly at the hands of the Palestine Liberation Organisation can be counted on to prevent Palestinian terrorists returning, it is thought.

The Syrian Army, which at present occupies most of eastern Lebanon, is thought unlikely to advance any farther for fear of provoking another Israeli attack.

Nevertheless the security of Israel's northern border, the reason for the invasion of Lebanon, will be all the more vulnerable with such important strategic positions in hostile hands.

Although squarely situated in Lebanon, the Jabal Barouk range was occupied by the Syrians before the Israeli invasion in 1982. Syrians are expected to return there within hours of the Israelis moving out, and the main Israeli concern is that guerrilla attacks on north Israel might start again.

Searches of villages and vehicles in south Lebanon have uncovered sophisticated weaponry including rocket launchers, and most rockets have a range of up to five miles, which would enable terrorists in south Lebanon to his Israeli targets.

Anti-terrorist line

OUR JERUSALEM CORRESPONDENT writes: Israel is to establish three new settlements near the Lebanese border to reinforce an anti-terrorist line.

Germans block deal on farm price freeze

By GODFREY BROWN Agriculture Correspondent in Brussels

AN intransigent German stand against any reductions in guaranteed prices for the country's one million-plus farmers, many of them part-timers, emerged at a meeting of Common Market agriculture ministers in Brussels last night as the biggest single obstacle to agreement on this year's farm price package.

The package, proposed by the European Commission, calls for a virtual price freeze for the Community's eight million farmers.

But plans to reduce the cross-border taxes on trade in farm products arising from the strength of the German mark would actually mean price cuts for German farmers.

This, Herr Ignaz Kiechle, the German Farm Minister, finds impossible to accept.

Mr Jopling, Agriculture Minister, told reporters he had reminded his colleagues that they were bound by the budgetary constraints that were agreed at the Fontainbleau summit last June.

He produced horrifying figures to back his support for commission plans to cut by up to 6 per cent. the prices at which surplus fruit and vegetables are withdrawn from sale and usually destroyed, at Common Market expense.

STEEL PLAN

Officials optimistic

OUR COMMON MARKET CORRESPONDENT IN BRUSSELS writes: A desperate bid to avert the collapse of the Common Markets anti-crisis plan for the steel industry was launched by Community industry ministers last night with officials expressing cautious optimism that a deal would be reached.

The threat arises from demands by mands by France and Italy to be allowed to subsidise their industries beyond the levels already authorised by the European Commission.

First meeting for the Geneva sub-groups

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE American and Soviet sub-groups dealing specifically with space weapons met for the first time yesterday under the umbrella of the Geneva arms-control talks.

Since the talks opened two weeks ago the negotiators have been occupied with devising a format to keep the sub-groups, dealing with three categories of weapons within the united farmework insisted on by the Russians.

Today it will be the turn of the sub-groups dealing with long-range missiles; and tomorrow will see the first meeting of the sub-groups concerned with medium-range weapons.

Both sides have pledged themselves to preserving the "confidentiality" of the talks. So little is expected to emerge at this stage, although it is unlikely they are yet doing much more than outlining their positions.

Still expanding

The Soviet Union is still expanding its missile forces in this category, while Nato continues with its programme for deploying cruise and Pershing II missiles.

But the most complex of the three categories is undoubtedly space weapons. The Soviet Union insists there must be an agreement barring the "militarisation of space."

Moreover, it must have a "rigid inter-relationship" with agreements in the two other categories.

The Americans see their plans for a defensive system in space capable of fending off offensive missiles as "non-negotiable" and not to be regarded as in any way a chip on the bargaining table.

RUSSIA LAGS BEHIND HER SATELLITES

By Our Geneva Correspondent

GROWTH of output in the Soviet bloc slowed during 1984 according to the annual report of the Economic Commission for Europe released in Geneva yesterday.

It said overall aggregate net material product, the measure usually used for evaluating output of the Eastern Bloc, increased by some 3·5 per cent., down from a 4 per cent. increase in 1983.

Contraction of crops

Notwithstanding the overall figure output by the East European nations alone actually increased by 5 per cent. and was 1 per cent. better than in 1983, while the Soviet increase was only 2·5 per cent., down 1 per cent.

The report attributes the Soviet lag to a contraction in crop production, while agricultural output in Eastern Europe surged by nearly 7 per cent. over 1983.

East Germany and Rumania recorded the highest growth rates among the seven countries.

have begun their project to provide a modern home on the site of their former Home which served the Elderly of modest means since 1863. Due to its age and design for a past era it was no longer safe and has now been demolished to make way for the new construction which began on 3rd September 1984.

INDEPENDENT LIVING APARTMENTS FOR 20

RESIDENTIAL HOME
★ Chapel ★ Kitchen ★ Laundry ★
★ Medical Unit ★ Occupational Therapy ★
★ Physiotherapy ★ Chiropody ★ Hairdressing ★
★ Shop ★ Billiards ★ Concert Hall ★

Provision for 40 DAY RESIDENTS who can also share and profit of the family and social life of the Home as also the ancillary services.

The Little Sisters receive the elderly, whatever their nationality or beliefs, in Homes specially designed to meet their needs, where they are cared for until death. The Sisters endeavour to procure for them all necessary medical care and that well-being and comfort required by their advanced age as also spare-time occupations and interests which keep them young at heart and active in mind ... and all this in an evangelical ambiance which respects each person in the atmosphere of a true family, in fraternal affection, sharing, collaboration and open-mindedness.

A substantial amount of money has already been raised and our efforts are being intensified so that in June 1986 this Home will be a reality. The steel structure has now risen to second floor level and, as is to be expected, the bills are rising at the same speed! When completed this Home will be an eloquent symbol of the respect and gratitude we all owe to the elderly whom the Little Sisters are privileged and committed to serve day and night. No professional Fund raisers are involved in the appeal, thus, every penny received goes towards the unique goal — the new Home. A charitable group is financing all out-of-pocket expenses like postage, paper and engaging two typists, thus assuring that your donation goes directly to the Building fund.

Every donation will be gratefully received and acknowledged (the Little Sisters of the Poor are a Registered Charity — No. 234434). Donors of £5 and over will receive a certificate from the Little Sisters. Kindly make cheques payable to "The Little Sisters of the Poor".

To all who have already contributed go our thanks and to every reader we appeal for help. Covenant forms are available on request. God will never allow you to miss whatever you give for "the man who is kind to the needy, lends to Yahweh; he will repay him for what he has done". (Prov. 19:17).

SHAKE-UP FOR RUSSIAN MANAGERS

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

MR GORBACHEV, the new Soviet leader, wants to put Russia under new management, literally. Managers of farms and factories now find themselves in the hottest seats in the land.

They are being pressed hard, within weeks of the succession of Mr Gorbachev, at 54 the youngest man named to lead the Soviet Union since Stalin, to "drop their old baggage" and overcome "inertia" — or else.

A recent PRAVDA article quoted Lenin:

"The merciless expulsion of superfluous officials, the reduction of staff, the replacement of Communists who do not seriously study management affairs—that must be the line."

Press attack

PRAVDA said: "The possibility exists everywhere to work better than yesterday and give people more."

Mr Gorbachev is proving a demanding task-master. In speeches before taking power he called for "a restructuring of the forms and methods of economic management." He is already showing that he intends to achieve precisely that.

Press articles since President Chernenko died on March 10 have attacked the quality of management in industry and agriculture.

Too many old men were in key positions, resisting necessary changes, said one article. Better schools were needed to train industrial managers and businessmen.

New teaching methods and new agricultural colleges were needed to train farm specialists said another.

"What must be done is to break up what is obsolete and to go over to new methods of economic leadership," PRAVDA said. If scope is left open for inertia of thinking, it may give rise to inertia as regards mistakes, lack of respect for public opinion, swelling of the managerial apparatus and other hindrances that impede our advance."

The PRAVDA article attacked managers who inflate the importance of their own positions by "bustling about" and interfering with the business of enterprises best-placed to take their own decisions.

'Only issue orders'

In Omsk, the paper said, each director of a State farm had 26 people in position over him who could interfere and tel him what to do.

"Many of them are not responsible for the farm's affairs and naturally do not give it anything but paperwork. They only issue orders. The director has no influence."

Managers too often ignored the guidance of people on the spot or clung blindly to outdated methods, PRAVDA said. When criticised, these managers always replied they were implementing a system they had inherited and had no right to change.

Mr Gorbachev is telling them, however, that they must make changes if they want to keep their jobs.

Soviet Press attacks journalists

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

A SERIES of Soviet Press attacks on Western correspondents since President Chernenko died on March 10 may signal a crackdown on foreign journalists' activities as part of the campaign for order and discipline launched by the new Kremlin leader, Mr Gorbachev.

Being the occasional object of personal attacks in Soviet newspapers is an occupational hazard for Western correspondents in Moscow. But there has been an unusual spate of such attacks in the past two weeks.

Three separate articles have assailed correspondents of NEWSWEEK, the BBC, Reuters and the NEW YORK TIMES for alleged misconduct while travelling in the Soviet Union.

A Danish correspondent was recently summoned to the Soviet Foreign Ministry and told he was concentrating on the "wrong kind" of stories.

The new leader has shown himself jovial and at ease in encounters with Western newsmen. Before his December visit to Britain he even took the unprecedented step of replying, albeit negatively, to requests for interviews.

Senate wins plea on documents in trial of judge

By DENIS WARNER in Melbourne

THE Senate, the upper house of the Australian Parliament, made a surprise and successful intervention yesterday in the committal proceedings against Mr Justice Murphy, the High Court judge, to protect the privilege of four subpoenaed documents.

An attack by Mr Justice Murphy's counsel on the memory of one of the Crown's key witnesses marked the second day of the case in the Sydney Court of Petty Hearings.

Mr Justice Murphy, Federal Attorney-General in the Whitlam Labour government, is facing two charges of attempting to pervert the course of justice by trying to influence the Chief Stipendiary Magistrate in New South Wales and a District Court judge in a conspiracy case involving Mr Morgan Ryan, a Sydney solicitor.

Soon after the court resumed yesterday, two legal representatives of the Senate sought to intervene in the case.

Privilege cited

Mr Peter Biscoe, a Sydney barrister, said that documents which the court had subpoenaed from hearings of a Senate select committee last year were privileged in terms of the Australian Constitution, and could not be questioned or analysed outside Parliament.

Mr Alex Shand, Q.C. for Mr Justice Murphy, argued against the Senate having legal representation.

He said the Senate had no separate judicial existence. There was an enormous risk that the proceedings could be seriously hampered or obstructed by agreeing that a non-party be allowed to appear.

There was also a grave risk that justice could be obstructed.

"The little fellow"

Mr Arthur Riedel, the Stipendiary Magistrate, ruled that Mr Biscoe would be allowed to appear in the rôle of Amicus curiae.

Mr Clarrie Briese, Chief Stipendiary Magistrate in New South Wales, said that at a dinner at his home in 1982, Mr Justice Murphy had told him the evidence against Morgan Ryan did not support conspiracy charges.

Later, at a cocktail party in Sydney, when Mr Briese had told the judge that the charges would go ahead, Mr Justice Murhpy had said: "The little fellow will be shattered."

Mr Briese said he had been told by Mr Justice Murphy that the Attorney-General in New South Wales was going ahead with plans to make the magistrates independent of the Public Service.

Mr Briese replied that was good news. Whereupon, Mr Justice Murphy asked: "Now what about my little mate?"

Evidence 'weak'

Under cross-examination by Mr Shand, Mr Briese admitted he did not have a perfect memory.

Asked about the dinner at his home, Mr Briese had said that in discussing the Morgan Ryan case, Mr Justice Murphy had remarked the evidence was weak and did not justify a charge of conspiracy.

Under cross-examination Mr Briese agreed it was possible that Mr Justice Murphy had said the evidence against Morgan Ryan was weak, and that he himself could have said, "You don't think it supports a charge of conspiracy?" — to which Mr Justice Murphy had replied, "No."

The long train of events began early last year with the publication in the Melbourne newspaper THE AGE of transcripts of illegal police tapes in New South Wales.

This led to two Senate select committee hearings, to the trial and imprisonment of a Sydney magistrate for perverting the course of justice, and to the charges against Mr Justice Murphy.

Under strong pressure from the Opposition in Canberra, Mr Lionel Bowen, Attorney-General, who had previously refused to grant indemnity to police involved in the illegal tapes, yesterday made an abrupt about-face.

At the same time, the Opposition in the New South Wales Parliament has brought up fresh allegations of corruption arising from the so-called AGE tapes.

IRON CROSS SPY GOES ON TV

By DENIS WARNER in Melbourne

MR CHARLES EVANS, who claims to have been a British double-agent in Germany during the war, appeared on Australian television last night with his Iron Cross (First Class).

"I'd lived for five years as a German before the war," he said. "That's better, having a man on the ground, than bringing in someone after war breaks out."

He said he was certain that Adml. Canaris, head of German military intelligence under the Nazis, was working for the British Secret Service and knew who he was.

Film of execution

"I always thought that Canaris gave qualified information," he said. "If it was for England and against Germany, he would divulge it." The admiral thought the best thing for Germany was to lose the war.

Mr Evans said he saw Hitler show a film of Adml Canaris's execution by hanging with piano wire. Hitler took a great delight in it. He was a sadist.

Asked how he conducted his operations in Germany, Mr Evans said that MI6 created for him a great array of "aunts" and cousins in Germany and Poland.

Peking workers trade dollars for profit

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

AMID signs that China's capitalist-orientated reforms are beginning to get slightly out of hand, Peking's economic daily newspaper printed yet another example yesterday of what seems to be growing financial skulduggery within the Communist state.

The story was told of a Peking parts factory that signed a contract with a television equipment manufacturer to import computer parts.

The factory purchased from the Office of Foreign Economic Relations $300,000 (£256,400) for the deal, at a rate of about three Chinese yuan per dollar. However, the idea was simply a cover for a cash transaction as no parts were ever imported.

The contract was simply a means to resell each dollar at an inflated value of more than four yuan to make a huge profit, which was then distributed among the staff.

String of tales

This is but one of a string of woeful tales emerging every week as China tries to cope with, as the PEOPLE'S DAILY puts it, "the bit of decadent and corrupt bourgeois culture" that is "unavoidably" creeping into society as it opens to foreign trade and technology.

So-called unjustified bonuses for staff in factories and businesses in Peking have grown to such alarming proportions that public warnings have been issued about the situation.

Considerable publicity is being given at the moment to black market money changers. Four men have just been arrested at Shumchun, the special economic zone near Hongkong, and sent to labour camps.

Between them, they were said to have been carrying the equivalent of £15,420 in Chinese currency for changing with tourists for Hongkong and American dollars.

Intriguingly, the views of Teng Lichun, the Communist party's propaganda chief who is widely considered to be opposed to the introduction of radical Western ideas, are now being aired widely.

He met a party of visiting American journalists shortly after their audience this week with Teng Hsiao-ping, China's leader.

According to those present, he talked of Teng's urban and rural reforms of the economy being universally welcomed in China.

But he disclosed that they had thrown up several problems that had resulted in a two-month investigation by the Communist party in January and February.

He spoke of profiteering by shopkeepers, government units exceeding budgets, government officials lacking experience to cope with the new policies, a rise in the amount of cash in circulation because bank interest rates were too low, and promises of pay rises that were not matched by increases in production.

After the review, he said, the government had decided to control currency, credit and loans more tightly, and limit wages.

He was quoted as saying: "To practice capitalism in China is to revert to the old China.

10,000 MEN IN OMANI EXERCISE

By Maj-Gen EDWARD FURSDON Defence Correspondent in Muscat

THE Omani Armed Forces are about to start the largest and most ambitious military exercise they have ever attempted.

Code-named Exercise Ra'ad ("Thunder") and involving 10,000 men and 300 vehicles, including Chieftain tanks, it is to take place in the desert about 40 miles south-east of Nizwa — midway between Adam and al-Mintrib.

The aim is to give the Army and Air Force practice in a combined conventional war operation in defence of the sultanate. The initial scenario is of an imaginary neighbour state called Marmul invading Omani territory across an imaginary disputed border with the object of capturing a newly discovered rich oilfield.

Infantry brigades with full supporting arms, a helicopter assault battalion and special forces will all be deployed.

One very important factor is that the full logistic supply of both sides, including provision of water and the evacuation and processing of 500 simulated casualties, will be "played for real" out in the desert area.

The Air Force will undertake attack, helicopter and transport support operations.

This very significant eight-day two-sided live exercise will incorporate a very high degree of "free play" and so will certainly give battalion and brigade commanders practice in the skill of tactical command.

It will also focus on what even Nato finds the extremely difficult problem of controlling the air space over the battlefield through which ground-attack aircraft, helicopters, missiles, airborne reconnaissance vehicles, artillery and mortar fire will all be competing for priority and safe passage.

£14m PAYOUT FOR CHINA OIL SPILL

The London Steamship Owners Mutual Insurances Association has agreed to pay $6,300,000 (£5,383,000) in settlement of the worst oil spill in Chinese waters since the Communist takeover in 1949, according to the New China News Agency.

The sum was compensation for pollution in the northern harbour of Qingdao when the Panama-registered tanker Feoso Ambassador, 24,825 tons, ran aground.—Reuter.

JOSEPH'S PLAN TO GIVE EVERY CHILD A BETTER CHANCE

By JOHN IZBICKI Education Correspondent

THE improvement of teaching, as well as special powers for Sir Keith Joseph, Education Secretary, to require teachers to have their classroom performance appraised, are contained in a White Paper published yesterday.

The White Paper, which aims to improve just about every aspect of schooling, from the curriculum to discipline, from school government to examinations, wants every child, regardless of ability, to be given a better chance.

It sets out Government plans to:

LEGISLATE to reform school governing bodies so that they may no longer be politically rigged by local authorities, and give parents a very much more substantial say in the running of their schools.

INTRODUCE a system of specific grants to force local authorities to make refresher courses for teachers more effective. At present, authorities receive money for this purpose but are not forced to spend it as requested.

EXTEND the Secretary of State's existing powers for regulating the employment of teachers to cover the appraisal of their performance.

INTRODUCE a new examination—the Advanced Supplementary level (A S), to broaden sixth form education so that those taking arts-based A-levels also tackle science A-levels and vice-versa. Each will be worth half an A-level and will be recognised for university/polytechnic entry.

COME to grips with the increasing problems of school discipline and pupil truancy.

Worth of homework

In 95 pages, the White Paper goes as far as to discuss the question of homework, a matter not normally dealt with by central government. But Sir Keith wants every school to formulate a clear homework policy, and says:

"Homework is an important element of independent study and is not necessarily done at home. Appropriately set and marked homework reinforces work in the classroom.

"Yet the available evidence suggests that few local authorities at present have formulated explicit policies for homework and the homework policies of most schools are not fully worked out.

"Homework policies should relate to such matters as the amount, range and character of what should be expected in the primary and secondary phases of various ages and ability levels, the conditions which make for the effective use of homework, and the problems faced by pupils whose home environment may make study at home difficult."

Quality of teachers

Sir Keith, despite his oft-repeated belief that most teachers at most schools are doing a tough job well, nevertheless states that general quality is not good enough.

"The employment of sufficient teachers fosters, but does not guarantee, quality in teaching," the document says, adding:

"There is much excellent teaching in maintained schools. Nevertheless, the Government's view, reached in the light of reports by H M Inspectorate, is that a significant number of teachers are performing at a standard below that required to achieve the objectives now proposed for the schools."

Regulations are shortly to be amended to force local authorities and governors of aided schools to look at the formal qualifications of all teachers in their employment to make sure that they are suitable for the education required by their pupils.

This will make sure that qualifications match up to subjects being taught, so that it will no longer be possible for a teacher qualified in, say English, to be teaching methematics, or one with a degree in sociology to be teaching chemistry.

To hammer home the need for teachers not only to be properly qualified but also to keep up to date with the most recent research and developments, in-service training — refresher courses to improve their career development and teaching standards—is to be tackled as a priority.

As already announced in last week's Budget statement, specific grants, that is, grants ordered by Government to be spent by local authorities only for this specific purpose, are to be introduced to support local authority expenditure on this item.

Salary structure

Turning to the management of the teaching force, the White Paper enters the delicate area of salary structure, at the centre of the present dispute.

Regardless of the fact that the National Union of Teachers has walked out of talks on a new structure, including the appraisal of teachers, it declares that the Government "welcomes the sustained efforts made by many parties to negotiate a new salary structure for primary and secondary teachers."

Such a structure would embrace "new pay scales, a new contractual definition of teachers' duties and responsibilities and the introduction of systematic performance appraisal, designed to bring about a better relationship between pay, responsibilities and performance, especially teaching performance in the classrooms."

Sir Keith Joseph

And Sir Keith then puts in writing what he has been threatening for many months: "It is proposed that the Secretary of State's existing powers for regulating the employment of teachers should be extended to enable him, in appropriate circumstances, to require local authorities regularly to appraise the performance of their teachers."

Inquiring minds

He could not be clearer than that. If the teacher unions and their local authority employers fail to come to an agreement on restructuring, including teacher appraisal, then Sir Keith will force through such assessments by law.

Not satisfied with telling teachers that they must improve their teaching standards, the Government also is determined to improve what is being taught in schools. The curriculum is tackled in some detail.

"There is wide agreement about the purposes of learning at school, in particular that pupils should develop lively, inquiring minds," it says and adds:

"They must also "acquire understanding, knowledge and skills relevant to adult life and employment and develop personal moral values."

Whether at an ordinary or at special schools, the curriculum should be:

BROAD: It should introduce the pupil to a wide range of knowledge, understanding and skills.

BALANCED: Each part should be allotted sufficient time to make its special contribution, but not so much that it squeezes out other essential parts.

RELEVANT: Subjects should be taught so as to bring out their applications to the pupils' own experience and to adult life, and to give due emphasis to practical aspects.

DIFFERENTIATED: What is taught and how it is taught need to be matched to pupils' abilities and aptitudes.

Achievement records

New examinations, already widely publicised, are to be introduced in order to improve the present state of affairs and serve the curriculum: the General Certificate of Secondary Education which merges and replaces the G C E Ordinary level and the C S E examinations: the Advanced Supplementary level to promote greater "depth" for those taking A-levels, allow a greater mix of arts and sciences and require half the study time of A-levels while still being credited at half an A-level.

And there will be records of achievement, passports for pupils showing what they have managed to achieve outside the examination sphere. By the end of the decade, all pupils leaving school will receive such a record.

On the question of school discipline, the White Paper states that nothing undermines the efforts of schools as the failure to keep in check "discourtesy, disorder and disruption.

"The public rightly regards standards of pupil behaviour as a touchstone of the quality of the school system. The poor standards found in a small minority of schools give rise to widespread concern and anxiety.

"A school's efforts to promote high standards of conduct are frustrated if the pupils are not constructively occupied or become bored. One remedy lies in imaginative teaching and a determination actively to involve pupils and interest them in their work."

It mentions the controversial legislation that will give parents the choice of allowing a school where the cane is still in use to impose corporal punishment on their child or to forbid such punishment to be meted out. But it says that self-discipline and the rewards for high standards of conduct are of utmost importance.

Increasing truancy

"Many schools could do more to emphasise these positive aspects and so reduce their reliance on disciplinary sanctions."

Parents, above all, should support their children's schools by seeing that their children attend regularly. The Government is clearly concerned about mounting truancy, particularly towards the end of compulsory schooling at ages 14-16.

"In too many cases the pupil's absence is condoned by parents. A better curriculum and more effective teaching should reduce truancy where it results from boredom."

In order to correct rising truancy rates, the Government has issued a circular that will give wider powers to the education welfare services — or the truancy officers, as they used to be known.

Regular and searching analyses of school attendance registers are to be conducted and non-attendance records are to be kept, giving detailed reasons for truancy and other absences — these to be given, possibly annually, to each school's board of governors.

It is the board of governors that forms one of the most important reforms announced in the White Paper.

Parent power

Sir Keith appears to have retreated from his originally held stance — the determination to give parents an overall majority on governing boards. This proposal created uproar and Sir Keith was inundated with critical comments. Even the National Confederation of Parent-Teacher Associations rejected the idea.

The proposed legislation will certainly give parents far more powers than they have ever had in the government of schools: but, more important still, it will end political rigging of boards.

Depending on the size of a school, the board of governors will comprise from a total of nine to 19 members. Parents and local authority appointed members will, between them, hold the majority.

For example, a small school with, say 250 pupils, will have three governors appointed by and from parents; three appointed by the local authority; one elected by and from teachers; and four co-opted members. The head will be a member, too.

In the case of a big comprehensive of 600 pupils or more, five governors would come from parents, five from local authorities, two from teachers and six co-opted plus the head—a total of 19.

Head's responsibility

This wide-reaching legislation, which more closely resembles proposals made in the Taylor Report of School Government, will give parents greater say. But the White Paper makes it clear that the day-to-day running of schools and the maintenance of discipline must remain the responsibility of the head.

But the present arrangement, whereby local authorities appoint the majority of governors so that "these appointees can dominate the governing body," will be ended.

The White Paper reiterates Sir Keith's welcoming comments of the Swann Report on ethnic minorities in that it repeats Government policies to "reduce under-achievement wherever it occurs" and support the education service in preparing pupils for an ethnically mixed society which is working towards racial harmony.

Size of schools

It even lays down the minimum size of schools. For example, a comprehensive school for pupils aged 11 to 16 should have at least 180 children entering it yearly. "A school with five or fewer classes entering each year is unlikely to be able to offer a good curriculum without disproportionately generous staffing," it says.

A comprehensive with a sixth form (11-18 plus) needs to be of a size that can maintain a sixth form of at least 150 pupils.

Only with such a size can the school offer an adequate range of A-levels and other courses, it states and adds: "With fewer pupils than this, effective co-ordination with other institutions is usually essential for the needs of sixth form pupils."

This would appear to augur bad news for the small comprehensive and could spell either more closures or mergers in the years to come or a greater form of sharing facilities and teachers with other nearby schools.

As with the Swann Report, a summary has been produced with this White Paper, and will be sent free to every local authority for distribution to schools. More than 60,000 copies of the 20-page summary booklet have been produced.

STOOL OF THOUGHT

Rev. Dan Richards, rector of Ilchester, Somerset, has been advised by doctors to avoid standing as he suffers from varicose veins. The village postmaster, Mr John Miller, has made a him a special wooden stool so that he can remain seated when delivering his sermons.

I blame him.

(Drop that coffee and move!)

(You should see the dent your freight left in his bumper when he backed into it. The warehouse is really overcrowded.)

I blame him.

"The computer has broken down."
(Sid, the human computer, is off sick.)

"Ah, you may be a regular customer, sir, but we still have to ask these questions now don't we?"
(No we don't, not if we have proper customer profiles.)

I blame him.

"I'm sorry, you must have the wrong number."
(That's bought us 30 seconds.)

"We told you about these charges when you booked."
(They didn't. It's the forwarder's job to work out all costs, not yours!)

"We're having a slight problem with the Customs but your goods will be cleared within a day."
(Guess what, they've lost the documentation.)

It's the most tempting thing in the world for freight forwarders to try and shift the blame if they make a mistake.
We'd be the first to admit that in this business things can go wrong, things beyond the control of any forwarder.
The difference of course is what happens when they do go wrong. And if there's one thing we hate, it's having to make excuses. So we don't.
Instead, we get rid of the reasons for making them in the first place.
To do that we get the right kind of people. People who take responsibility; take action; tell you the truth.
You don't have to believe us.
Next time you send freight by air, land or sea – try us. Our sister forwarding companies, Transflash and MCCS, share our philosophy.
Of course, if you want to carry on listening to excuses, there's plenty of people to choose from...

With a saving of just £1,000, this exporter went out of business.

When faced with the choice of whether to take out export credit insurance or not, our friend decided to pocket the cost of a policy and run the risk.

True, he saved £1,000.

As export credit insurers we can't guarantee that things won't go wrong.

But we can guarantee up to 90 or 95% of an exporter's money if an overseas customer or country fails to meet its obligation to pay.

If you're in the export business, then you know about the risks.

If you're not insured against non-payment, then maybe that's a risk we can remove.

SURVEY FINDS HIGH RATE OF CHEMICAL POLLUTION IN U.S.

By IAN BALL in New York

A "POST-BHOPAL" survey of hundreds of chemical plants in the United States has found that hazardous materials are being emitted into the atmosphere at far higher levels and at many more locations than environmentalists had suspected.

The survey was ordered by a Congressional sub-committee on health and the environment after disclosures that no regulations in America controlled the release of methyl isocyanate, the substance that killed more than 2,000 people in Bhopal, India, last December, after a leak at a Union Carbide plant.

They found the plants were discharging into the atmosphere annually thousands of tons of cancer-causing agents and other extremely hazardous materials.

Worst areas

For the most part, this pollution was not illegal. Some of the materials are subject to no regulations. Others are covered by various State or federal laws, but no uniform standards apply.

"Almost every chemical plant we received information about is releasing staggeringly high rates of hazardous chemicals, even in routine releases," said Mr Henry Waxman, a California Democrat, who is chairman of the sub-committee that ordered the survey.

The most lethal chemical discharges were found in parts of West Virginia, Texas and Louisiana. In the heavily populated New York-New Jersey-Connecticut area, dangerous levels of chemical pollution were found in Newark, New Jersey, Buffalo, New York and Wallingford and Danbury, Connecticut.

The information was provided by the chemical companies themselves. The subcommittee had sent questionnaires to the firms asking them to list the amounts of proven and suspected carcinogens and other hazardous materials being released into the atmosphere.

The companies voluntarily co-operated with the congressional investigators, a reaction that may not have occurred a year or two ago.

Los Angeles alert over gas leaks

By IAN BRODIE in Los Angeles

AS a state of emergency was declared, workers began drilling the first of five wells in a normally busy Los Angeles shopping district yesterday to burn off methane gas leaking from an abandoned oil field in an operation that could take weeks or months.

The gas exploded on Sunday, demolishing a clothing store and injuring 22, two critically. Afterwards, flames continued to leap from fissures in the ground.

Nine blocks in the Fairfax district were cordoned off as officials discussed how to cope with the environmental disaster.

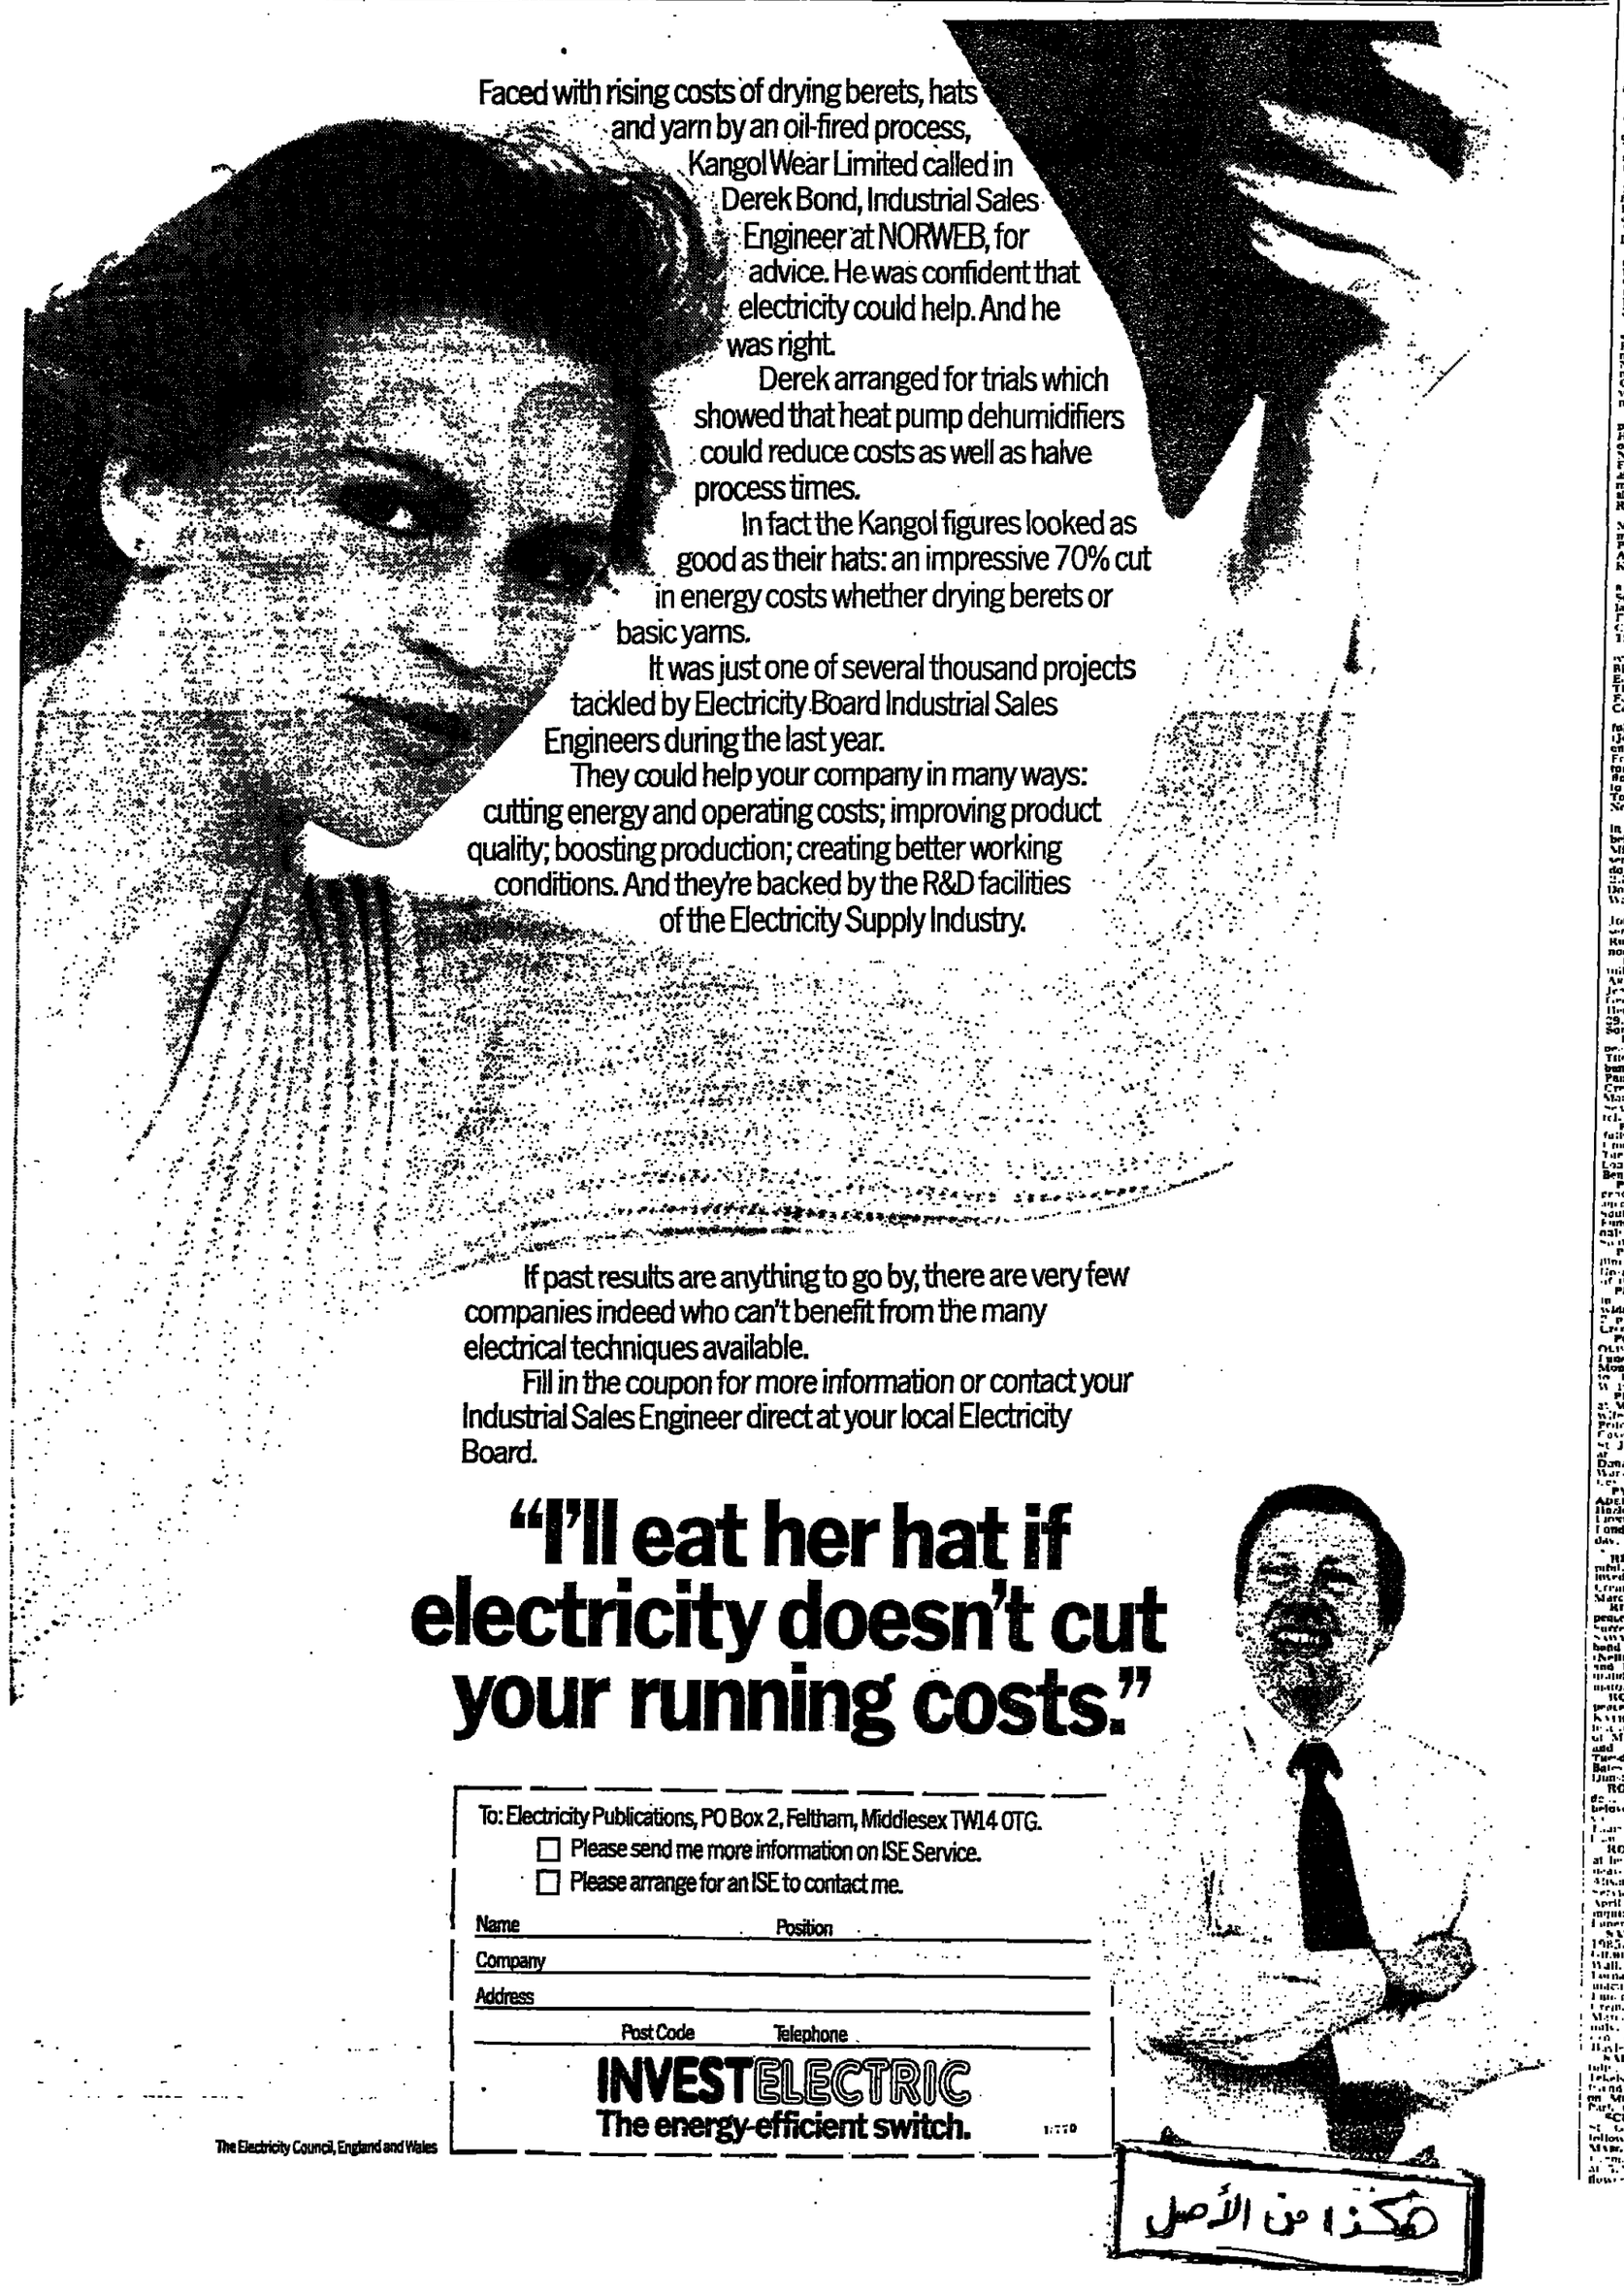
$500,000 loss

The area was not evacuated but 160 businesses were ordered to remain closed indefinitely, including farmers' market, a famous tourist attraction. A conservative estimate puts the daily loss at more than $500,000 (£420,000).

Thearea will return to normal only when pressure drops below a level that would not cause another explosion. That may mean burning several million cubic feet of gas if, as feared, multiple gas pockets are found.

Sunday's explosion was probably caused by a seepage of methane into the clothing shop's basement which was then touched off by an electrical spark. During the first 30 years of this century oil wells large and small operated in the district.

Lady Redgrave, widow of Sir Michael Redgrave, watching her daughters Vanessa (centre) and Lynn examine floral tributes after his funeral at Mortlake crematorium yesterday.



Faced with rising costs of drying berets, hats and yarn by an oil-fired process, Kangol Wear Limited called in Derek Bond, Industrial Sales Engineer at NORWEB, for advice. He was confident that electricity could help. And he was right.

Derek arranged for trials which showed that heat pump dehumidifiers could reduce costs as well as halve process times.

In fact the Kangol figures looked as good as their hats: an impressive 70% cut in energy costs whether drying berets or basic yarns.

They could help your company in many ways: cutting energy and operating costs; improving product quality; boosting production; creating better working conditions. And they're backed by the R&D facilities of the Electricity Supply Industry.

If past results are anything to go by, there are very few companies indeed who can't benefit from the many electrical techniques available.

Fill in the coupon for more information or contact your Industrial Sales Engineer direct at your local Electricity Board.

MINISTERS URGED TO ALLAY ULSTER FEARS

By PETER PRYKE Parliamentary Correspondent

BRITISH ministers should allay fears in Northern Ireland that their recent discussions with the Irish government might imperil pledges on the future of the province, Mr JAMES MOLYNEAUX, leader of the Official Unionists, told the Commons last night.

He said a speech by Dr FitzGerald, the Irish Prime Minister, on Friday, implied that the two governments were working on "novel and far-reaching proposals" for joint authority over Northern Ireland.

This and subsequent "inspired Press articles" had caused confusion and dismay in the province.

Declaring that comments by Mr Hurd, Northern Ireland Secretary, had failed to remove the anxieties, Mr Molyneaux, said the pledge that there could be no change in Ulster's constitutional position without the free and willing consent of its people had to be reaffirmed, if "disaster" was to be averted.

He criticised Mr Hurd for the ambiguity of remarks about the speculation being "overblown" and "well ahead of the game," and said that even those who cherished Foreign Office double talk had to make the position clear.

"Their opposite numbers in Dublin have put them on the spot," Mr Molyneaux said. Statements in Dublin had created a situation where words like "overblown" and "exaggeration" no longer carried any conviction or reassurance.

He said that the Prime Minister's clear response last year to the Dublin Forum report presenting options for constitutional change in Ulster had removed doubts in the province, but added: "The tactic of drift and double speak must be abandoned now if all that the Prime Minister has achieved for all the people of Northern Ireland is not to be ruthlessly torn away."

Addressing Mr John Biffen, who as Leader of the House replies on a variety of subjects raised during the debate, he said that the Prime Minister's forthright statement in November had led to a dramatic change in the province.

Mr MOLYNEAUX: Pledge must be reaffirmed if disaster is to be averted.

Protestants and Roman Catholics had recognised then the futility of squabbling over something which was not going to happen and had begun to ask how they could cooperate to make Ulster a better place for all.

Tragically, that had all been put at risk by a concerted offensive by Republican politicians and certain churchmen culminating in Dr FitzGerald's speech.

'Relentless pressures'

Mr BIFFEN said he was happy to underline that there was no change in the pledge on Northern Ireland's constitutional future.

It was a commitment which had existed for more than two decades, and no more powerfully than on the lips of the Prime Minister.

"Of all our citizens, those in the province live under the most relentless pressures. It is all too easy in this Chamber and this side of the channel to lose touch with the very real anxiety which is bound to exist in the province under these pressures."

Tory critics given the bird

By Our Parliamentary Staff

AFTER describing the critical bishops as "cuckoos," Mrs THATCHER yesterday brushed aside critics of Government economic policy within her own party as "occasional grouse."

Her remarks followed a four-day debate in which several senior Conservatives, including Mr Heath, had attacked the Budget as inadequate to deal with unemployment.

Yesterday the Prime Minister was asked by Mr DEREK FATCHETT (Lab. Leeds Central) whether her reference to "cuckoos" now extended to the growing number of Conservative critics.

Mr Heath did not join the Tory laughter when Mrs Thatcher replied: "The answer is no. We have occasional grouse, but nothing else."

'Bright future'

Mr KINNOCK, referring to Mrs Thatcher's Downing Street meeting with young people, asked: "Would you look them in the eye and honestly say to them, as you did in Newcastle, that a bright, confident future beckons?"

Mrs THATCHER said she would point out that the economy was expanding, and that there was record investment and living standards. She would also tell them she hoped they would benefit from the great expansion in youth training services.

But Mr KINNOCK retorted that rhetoric about the economy would not cut the dole queues.

THATCHER DEPLORES SHOOTINGS

By Our Parliamentary Staff

GOVERNMENT condemnation over the shooting of blacks in South Africa was reinforced by Mrs THATCHER in the Commons yesterday.

It was particularly sad and deplorable that these events came just when other things seemed to be moving, she said when the matter was raised by Mr Steel, Liberal leader.

"Only a few days before we had heard that the policy, which we deeply deplored, of forced removals had been suspended," she said.

Gravely concerned

Sir Geoffrey Howe, Foreign Secretary, had made it clear to the South African ambassador, Dr Dennis Worrall, that the Government was gravely concerned at these events on the anniversary of the Sharpesville massacre.

Mr STEEL said that 25 years on from Sharpeville, all the cosmetic improvements in South Africa did not hide the fundamental evil and injustice of apartheid.

TRIDENT BOOST FOR JOBS

By Our Parliamentary Staff

The Trident missile programme is expected to lead to an extra 30,000 jobs in the United Kingdom during its peak years, Mr ADAM BUTLER, Defence Procurement Minister, told the Commons yesterday.

He said 17,000 jobs would be created directly and a further 13,000 indirectly.

Joseph accused of unconcern over teachers' dispute

By ANTHONY LOOCH

SIR KEITH JOSEPH, Education Secretary, was attacked by the Opposition for not announcing a new peace initiative in the teachers' dispute, when he made a Commons statement about his White Paper, "Better Schools," yesterday.

He was accused of "fiddling while Rome burns."

Mr GILES RADICE, Shadow Education Secretary, said remarks by Sir Keith about partnership rang hollow in a week when the education of 500,000 schoolchildren had been disrupted by the dispute.

He said Sir Keith had himself admitted that the new proframe would be hard to achieve within existing expenditure levels.

Why therefore was the Government proposng to cut local authority education expenditure by nine per cent. in real terms over the next three years, during which time the number of pupils was expected to fall by only five per cent.?

Extremely sad

Sir KEITH replied that it was extremely sad that teachers had chosen to disrupt the schooling of millions of children.

"The teachers' unions seem to be in the business of rejecting. They have rejected a pay offer, they have rejected arbitration, and have refused even to take part in a discusion on structure and appraisal," he added.

Mr RADICE: Hollow ring to remarks about partnership.

Earlier, in his statement, he said the Government's principal aims were to raise the standards achieved by pupils of all abilities, and secure the best possible return for the resources invested in school education.

Sir Keith said: "Much of what needs to be done is neither a question of money, nor of action by the Government alone. The education system is a partnership.

"Each partner has important responsibilities which the Government intends to preserve. Each can do his job effectively only with the help of the other.

Common endeavour

"The Government believes that co-operation and professional commitment will continue to be the norm within the education system.

"We believe that local education authorities, the churches and other voluntary bodies, governors, teachers, parents, employers and all others will join in the common endeavour to make standards of achievement and behaviour at every school as good as they can be, and need to be in the interests of the pupils and our national future."

In reply to Mr Radice's criticism of the proposed spending cuts, Sir Keith said that proposals were at present only provisional.

Mrs ELAINE KELLETT-BOWMAN (C, Lancaster) said the vast majority of people would be very pleased with the White Paper.

Mr NIGEL SPEARING (Lab., Newham S.) said real partnership could only be achieved by negotiation, not coercion.

Sir Keith's attitude to teachers showed that he did not understand the teaching service. He should not have introduced the White Paper while schools were closed because of a dispute which was his fault.

Mr RADICE said there was nothing really new in the White Paper.

Sir Keith must understand that there was no way in which he could achieve his plans without the support of the teaching profession, and the time was right for him to undertake another initiative in the teachers' dispute.

Forces' legal bar attacked

MPs from all sides of the Commons yesterday protested about the legal provision barring Servicemen from suing the Crown for negligence.

The attack was led by Mr JACK ASHLEY (Lab., Stoke-on-Trent S.), who demanded the repeal of Section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act.

He protested, during a short debate, that Servicemen injured during their normal peacetime duties were entitled only to compensation and statutory benefits and were unable to win damages. He complained: "It is the deprivation of basic human rights."

Mr Ashley scorned the Defence Ministry argument that allowing Servicemen to sue would "encourage indiscipline." He said comparable public servants, police and firemen, were able to sue for negligence.

He cited cases of three young Servicemen who had been killed and another who had been seriously injured, and said abolition of the Section should be made retrospective.

He was backed by Mr PETER VIGGERS (C., Gosport) who quoted the case of one of his constituents who fell from a platform into the sea and was entitled only to the normal Armed Forces compensation and was "deprived of the opportunity of getting what would undoubtedly be hundreds of thousands of pounds were he able to sue through the courts."

There was also support from Mr Paddy Ashdown (Lib., Yeovil), a former Royal Marines captain.

£95,000 ARMS JOB DEFENDED

By WILLIAM WEEKES Parliamentary Staff

THE appointment of Mr Peter Levene as Chief of Defence Procurement at a salary of £95,000 a year was defended by the Government against renewed criticism from the Opposition in the Commons yesterday.

Mr JOHN LEE, Defence Procurement Under Secretary, produced a "certain precedent" from the last Labour Government for the appointment of Mr Levene, former chairman of the United Scientific Holdings Group which supplies arms to the Defence Ministry.

"The Labour administration in 1969 appointed a certain Mr Leslie Norfolk, a former director of the heavy organic chemical division of ICI, as chief executive of the Royal Dockyards at a salary of £11,000 a year, considerably above the then going rate for a permanent secretary of £8,600."

Mr Lee added that Dr Owen, the then Under Secretary for the Royal Navy, had taken a "very close and supportive interest" in the appointment.

Last week in the Commons Dr Owen called on Mrs Thatcher to withdraw Mr Levene's appointment, claiming it was "compromising the integrity of the Civil Service."

Well qualified

Mr GORDON BROWN (Lab., Dunfermline E) demanded to know what role Mr Levene would have in awarding contracts "to his friends in the Defence Manufacturers' Association in which he was so recently a senior office bearer."

But Mr LEE retorted that Mr Levene, who had an outstanding record in the private sector, was extremely well qualified for his new job.

He had severed all connections with his former companies and divested himself of all shareholdings.

The Ministry spent something like £1 million an hour on procurement, and it needed only a very small improvement in approach to purchasing brought about by the involvement of Mr Levene to more than recoup his salary.

Mr DENZIL DAVIES, Shadow Defence Secretary, criticised Mr Lee's attempts to justify the appointment as "pathetic."

The Opposition objected to this attempt to bring someone who was an arms salesman into government when the relationship between government and defence manufacturers was at the best of times so close and symbiotic.

Mr DALE CAMPBELL-SAVOURS (Lab, Workington) referred to two companies, Aish, of Poole, and Dowty Rotol, of Cheltenham, which, he said, had fired employees who refused to keep quiet about cheating the Defence Ministry over contracts.

Mr LEE said he would look into these cases, and negotiations with both comoanies were proceeding. "The MoD police, certainly in the latter case, are examining the papers," he added.

'MUCH TRADE TO BE DONE' WITH CHINA

By WALTER ABURN Parliamentary Staff

THE impression that there was much business to be done between Britain and China on normal commercial terms had been gained by Lord YOUNG of GRAFFHAM during his recent visit to Peking, he told peers yesterday.

Lord Young, Minister Without Portfolio, said at Question Time in the Lords that he was confident that the trade mission he headed had made an important contribution to future development of trade and economic cooperation between the two countries.

A number of agreements were signed by members of the mission and all of them entered into discussions in areas where they hoped to do substantial business in future.

Chinese delegations had arrived here since his return home and those who accompanied him now had follow-through teams in China.

Lord Young said he would be ensuring that proper follow-up was provided. He hoped that projects would reach a conclusion in a matter of months.

Private members' measures passed

Peers gave third readings to and passed the Licensing (Amendment) Bill and the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries (Amendment) Bill, two private members' measures piloted through by Lord Harmar-Nicholls and Lord Newall

During third reading debate on the Administration of Justice Bill, the Lord Chancellor accepted amendments moved on behalf of the Law Society to amend regulations providing for the updating of the Solicitors' Roll. This Bill was also passed.

Lead weights plea

A petition asking the Lords to introduce legislation to ban the sale and use of lead weights on fishermen's lines on fresh water rivers, lakes and reservoirs in the United Kingdom was presented on behalf of Eton Town Council by Lord Charteris (Ind.) Provost of Eton and former Private Secretary to the Queen.

The personal computer everyone is writing for.

"Which company made the greatest contribution to Information Technology between 1973-83?"

The Company of the Decade was Logica.

In the same year, Logica's VTS 2200 word processor received the Queen's Award for Technological Achievement.

The Kennet's processing speed is about twice as fast as the IBM PC or ACT's Apricot.

The characters retain exceptional precision and clarity. The graphics are outstanding.

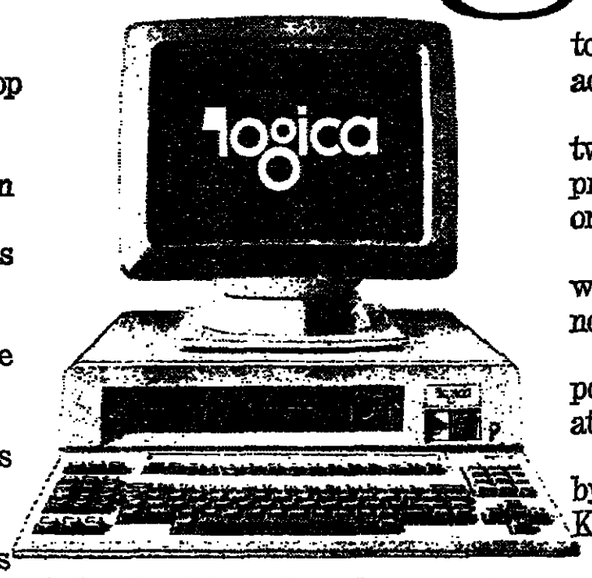
Like BOS, who make probably the best accounting software for personal business computers.

The BOS package covers all your accounting needs, consisting of sales ledger, invoicing, sales order processing, purchase and nominal ledger, payroll, inventory control and fixed assets.



BOS software accounts for the efficiency of over 8,000 companies throughout the World.

Another suite of software helping to enhance the reputation of Kennet is Psion's Xchange.

On Xchange you can master word processing, financial planning, database management, computer based filing and graphics.

In November 1984, Which Computer? commented – "we are in the unusual position of having no criticisms to make...Xchange is a remarkable achievement."

Psion Xchange and BOS are just two of the many hundreds of individual programmes and packages you can use on Kennet.

So whether your business grows by fits and starts or quantum leaps, Kennet will grow with it.

If you would like more information on the computer everyone is writing for, please fill in the coupon or call the Logica hotline on (0793) 693355. Today.

YOU CAN SEE IT ON THE BACK OF THE LATEST CAVALIERS. (IF YOU'RE QUICK.)

Our new GLi and GLSi models have the fuel-injection badge where other drivers will have the best chance of seeing it.

On the boot.

But the most noticeable feature of these two new Cavaliers is to be found lurking under the bonnet.

We have installed our 1800 engine with the Bosch LE Jetronic fuel-injection system.

It's the same power plant that gives the SRi so many followers. And which gives the CD figures of 0-60 in 9.1 seconds and 115 mph.

Indeed the performance will embarrass most 2 litre competitors.

And, as if to rub it in, these new Cavaliers neatly avoid the penalties of higher company car tax brackets.

Although you wouldn't think so, when you look at the levels of equipment.

There's tinted glass all-round and electrically operated and heated door mirrors on both sides.

The GLSi features all this and more. Outside it sports low-profile tyres and alloy wheels.

There are now no less than eight fuel-injected Cavaliers forming the line-up.

And, whether you decide on the hatchback or the saloon, they all feature the tenacious roadholding of front-wheel drive.

VAUXHALL CAVALIER GLi & GLSi.

Better. By Design.

PERFORMANCE FIGURES FROM 'WHAT CAR?' PRICES START FROM £7,740 FOR THE GLi AND £8,546 FOR THE GLSi. PRICES CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS, INCLUDE CAR TAX AND VAT. DELIVERY AND NUMBER PLATES EXTRA.

THEATRE / 'Wonderful Town'

Young at art, but lively

"WONDERFUL TOWN" may not be as wonderful a musical comedy as the admirers of Leonard Bernstein would wish. But the memory of its production in London 50 years ago is still green enough to make the revival at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama sentimentally attractive.

And the charming precision with which the students set about this Broadway warhorse takes the breath away. Like the leading character Eileen who turns up on the manhunt in New York in 1938 with a literary sister from Ohio.

Why, oh why did they ever leave Ohio? The signature tunesticks supplies the theme of a book by Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov from their play "My Sister Eileen" which tends to drag compared to Bernstein's songs and the lyrics of Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

In other words, however glad we are to see the show again and however admirably these young people stage it under the firm direction of Martin Connor, this is no masterpiece. But it does foreshadow masterly things to come like "West Side Story" which came only five years later; and for the two heroines up from the sticks and determined to make their names in New York, the scope and zest and contrast in personality create general delight.

We must remember it is 1938 when man did not make passes at girls in glasses. So it's only a matter of time before Jaye Griffiths takes hers off and charms not only the Brazilian navy but the rest of Greenwich Village as well as us.

As her luridly less inhibited sister, Maggie O'Neill has all the Irish cops at her beck and call with her perpetual bossy smile and raucus instinct for teasing any man in sight. And it is perhaps this noisy, self-conscious vitality and vulgarity which seemed a bit much for the British in 1955.

There are some wonderful moments in "Wonderful Town": from "Pass the football" to "Wrong Note Rag." The melodies of Bernstein linger on. And these students manage all of the show's business, in a useful setting by Terence Emery, with generally brilliant timing.

But the abiding appeal of the evening lies in the composer's art which we sense getting into its Broadway stride with its melodious or dissonant experiments and sheer adventurism of the score.

The only depressing side of the entertainment was the usual dismal dependence on throat microphones. If actors are now supplied with them at birth, who can blame their elders for succombing to them? Musical Directors: John Owen Edwards and Michael and Michael Haslem. The show moves to the Cambridge Arts Theatre next week.

Eric Shorter

MUSIC / Russia's night

TWO Russian works originating in the 1860s framed Monday's Barbican concert. Moreover, both works were written at identical points in their respective composers' careers, and both had some initial difficulty in making headway before the concert-going public of the day. For, while Mussorgsky was unsuccessfully trying to persuade Balakirev to perform his "Night on the Bare Mountain," Tchaikovsky was having similar trouble with Anton Rubinstein over his First Symphony.

Nowadays, both works have, to a greater or lesser degree, been absorbed into the repertory, and indeed the recent trend has been to return to the tough, starkly austere original version of the "Bare Mountain" which Balakirev so chastised but which has been heard to have an elemental power all its own.

However, as Yury Temirkanov and the BBC Symphony Orchestra showed, Rimsky-Korsakov's later recasting of the score, through which the piece first became widely known, is by no means redundant, and can be made to sound as exciting, as forceful, as orchestrally brilliant as Rimsky had hoped.

More than that, Mr Temirkanov properly allowed the music to relax into sumptuous repose in its final dream-like sequences, just as in the slow movement of the Tchaikovsky symphony he did not baulk at taking the music at a true, broadly sustained and reflective Adagio. Elsewhere, he whipped up playing of tremendous vigour and freshness, as much in the Tchaikovsky as in Sibelius's Violin Concerto. Here, though, the soloist Ernst Kovacic seemed ill at ease and was perhaps having an off night, for his playing, while secure enough in its idiomatic sweep, was marred (a memory lapse apart) by moments of uncertain intonation and an insufficiently telling exploration of the score's dynamic shadings.

Geoffrey Norris

Shining brass

THE existence of the Philip Jones Brass Quintet has extended the repertory for the medium out of recognition, as was once again shown by the group's programme at the Wigmore Hall on Monday. Here, having their first London performances, were two works by active composers, although only one was written expressly for the PJBQ.

This was Michael Berkeley's "Music from Chaucer," originally intended as incidental music for a Radio 3 series. It has five movements, each characterising a poem by Chaucer. A valse triste describing "The Grieving Queen" in suitably mournful sounds and a lively tune for "The Watchful Poet" are only the best of several attractive inventions. The briefest is the amusing "Fanfare for a Huntsman." All the movements are as resourceful as one would expect from Berkeley.

Elgar Howarth's Quintet, "The American," composed for a Pennsylvania University group, is a more serious affair. A concentrated, closely argued and textured opening movement is followed by a sombre, mysterious Lento, after which the piece rather loses its way in desultory writing. It is, however, throughout written with a full understanding of the techniques of the five instruments, as one would expect from a former brass player, and it requires a deal of virtuoso execution, which it duly received.

Mr Howarth also made the arrangement of pieces by the 16th-century composer Henry VIII, but these royal trifles were out-shone by three splendid dances from the 17th-century Samuel Scheidt.

Alan Blyth

BALLET / Soulful steps

MUCH OF the dancing in last night's performance by the Royal Ballet at Covent Garden was depressingly sedate; but there were two performances which stood out boldly, showing clearly the marvellous quality which Russians call dusha ("soul").

George Balanchine did not demand of his dancers that they should perform expressively; what he did exact was that they perform the steps correctly. On the other hand, he did not object if leading dancers showed individuality and personality, and Fiona Chadwick did just this in the leading rôle of "Ballet Imperial," reigning over the stage like a queen—notwithstanding the ludicrous little feathers which the designer, Christopher Le Brun, had sticking up from her mini-tiara.

One thinks of Tchaikovsky as a romantic composer, but the first movement of his piano concerto No. 2 is not blatantly romantic, and Chadwick chose to dance in this movement in a steely way, stressing the strong influence of Petipa on Balanchine.

Her face is very well suited to the stage, but it is far from romantic, and in the slow, romantic second movement, with its long violin melodies, Chadwick achieved a fascinating effect by keeping some steeliness in her legs and arms, but bending her long neck in a beautifully fluid and romantic way.

Fernau Hall

Sports spoof

IT IS not the verbal humour but the strenuous physicality which made such a success of John Godber's "Up 'n' Under," the splendid sporting spoof which has now arrived at the Fortune. After its London debut last year, the play won the Laurence Olivier Award for the comedy of the year.

It tells how, for a bet, a determined trainer takes over the fortunes of a gormless seven-a-side rugby team with an unbroken record of defeat, and brings it about that they win a victory over the best side in Yorkshire.

The men's hearty banter was mildly amusing, but the joy of the production (which I saw at the Donmar Warehouse) lay in the exercises undergone by the team under the supervision of a girl gymnast (Sarah Harper) and finally in the great game at the climax, when the two sides are both played by the same actors.

The author's ingenious direction, the use of slow motion and other theatrical tricks, turned this simple comedy into an unusual and even spectacular stage spectacle.

TELEVISION / Oscar

Not so Wilde about Oscar

HARDLY had "Bosie" been introduced at the famous house in Tite Street last night when the host began quoting himself. "My dear Lord Alfred, there is only one thing in the world worse than being talked about, and that is not being talked about," Oscar Wilde began. This was 1891, the year in which "The Picture of Dorian Gray" was published, and the author evidently knew it by heart.

It is known that Lord Alfred Douglas, then an Oxford undergraduate, was instantly entranced by the quality of Wilde's conversation. Clearly John Hawkesworth had a problem in matching this for his Oscar (BBC-2), the trilogy which continues tonight and on Thursday evening. But the great man would surely have thought it bad manners to rely so heavily on his own published lines.

One wise epigram this Oscar does not repeat in the three plays is that "a little sincerity is a dangerous thing, and a great deal of it is absolutely fatal." This enterprise is very sincere. It abides in general by the biographical findings of H. Montgomery Hyde, and its respectful care to avoid prurience and wild leaps of imagination makes for drama more waxwork than animated.

The opening play finds Wilde aged 37, already a glittering literary and social success, contentedly married and a doting father of two children. It is implied, very questionably, that the homosexual side of his nature was only activated when his doctor advised that the syphilis contracted in youth still lingered, and that physical expression of his love for his wife should cease.

While theatrical success happens in the margin the main concern is the friendship with the beautiful and selfish Bosie, and the resulting fatal quarrel with Lord Alfred's father the crazed Marquis of Queensbury. The Marquis alleges sodomy, Mr Hawkesworth prefers a friendship in the platonic mode. A decent veil is drawn over the mutual masturbation admitted in Bosie's 1929 autobiography.

It is further implied that Bosie's dislike of physical contact led Oscar directly to the rent boys who provided the evidence of indecent acts between consenting adults in private on which he was arrested — though the brothel which Wilde patronised was, of course, sanitised. It is a kind of achievement to make this story as inoffensive as an episode from "Upstairs, Downstairs."

I hope to return to the trilogy as a whole, and Henry Herbert's direction of it, on Friday. Suffice it to add here that, though it is no Oscar winner, it gradually becomes more involving and poignant. And that Michael Gambon's mild portrait of what he calls "a sweet, kind man" in the title role is finally justified. He is the best reason for watching.

The only thing against costume shows which have nothing new to say about familiar stories is that they may use resources which in the "golden age" of television drama, fondly recalled by part seven of Granada's Television (ITV), might have been allotted to plays which explored present concerns. Leslie Woodhead's "Playpower" could almost have been called "The Rise and Fall of the Single Play."

As always in this series the American experience dominated, but the early demise of the "golden age" when bland Hollywood took over by market force from sharp-edged New York should serve as a warning about what is happening more gradually here. Elsewhere in this compilation I was mainly tantalised by the wealth of good talkers never allowed by the editor to string more than two sentences together.

ART / Ireland points to the gaps

GIVEN THE population of Ireland there can be no doubt that the National Gallery in Dublin is the most remarkable collection owned by any country of remotely comparable size. Of this we are reminded by the exhibition "Masterpieces from the National Gallery of Ireland" opening today at the National Gallery, in Trafalgar Square.

To see paintings of the quality of the 35 which, until May 27, are on view in London is always a delight. Yet this is also an exhibition which raises a very serious point. It concerns a weakness in the National Gallery here in London.

Some of the greatest names in European art are represented. Thus, with rare generosity, Dublin have lent London fine works by Titian and Veronese, El Greco and Poussin, Rembrandt, and, not to ignore the most recent picture on view, a Nolde of 1915, which reminds us just how fine he could be.

This underlines a point which needs to be emphasised. Private generosity and the knowledge and discernment of the staff at the National Gallery have built up a wonderful collection, but we can now see that it has a grievous weakness.

Wider knowledge and many exhibitions, along with much research carried out since the last World War make it clear that the National Gallery's representation of Italian painting after the Renaissance is alarmingly weak.

The selection that has been made from the National Gallery of Ireland emphasises this.

We should be all the more grateful to the National Gallery of Ireland for letting us see many of their most beautiful pictures.

Working overseas?
You need to be adaptable and so does your life insurance.

As an expatriate, the demands made on you are more varied, the opportunities greater than for your home-based colleagues. At the same time, your financial responsibilities, such as school fees, will often be larger.

To safeguard your family and allow for changes too, Sun Alliance has designed a super flexible form of life insurance. Expatriate CIRTA Plus.

You have the option to increase the benefits or extend the policy after the initial term — particularly helpful if your contract is open-ended or likely to be renewed for further periods abroad.

On your return to the UK you can convert it to other forms of life insurance, such as policies to help you save, buy a house, plan your tax or your retirement.

All of these options apply without being bothered by the usual medical or other restrictions.

Off-Shore Option If required, the policy can be written off-shore in either sterling or US dollars, with premiums and benefits payable in Guernsey.

All in all, it's well worthwhile sending off the coupon to find out more about Expatriate CIRTA Plus. You could find it just the ticket to greater protection.

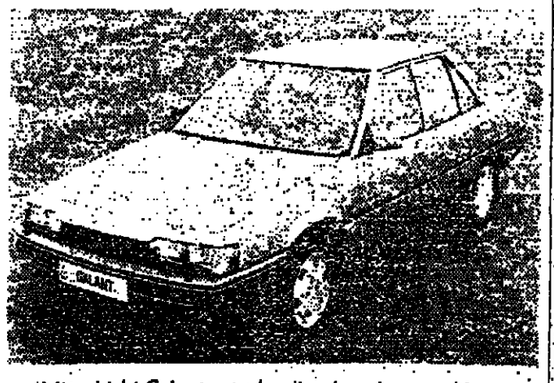
MOTORING — JOHN LANGLEY

The Chancellor and company cars



Mitsubishi Galant—turbo diesel engine as option.

ONE OF the motor industry lobbies that the Chancellor, Mr Lawson, chose to ignore in his Budget was a proposal for changes in the engine capacity brackets affecting the personal tax paid by users of company cars.

Austin Rover in particular was hoping that the middle capacity limit would be increased from the existing 1800cc to 2000cc. While manufacturers like Ford, Vauxhall and BMW have been developing new engines that slot in just below the 1800cc break point, Austin Rover has nothing between the 1·6-litre 'S' engine, as used in the Maestro, Montego and new Rover 216, and the 2-litre 'O' series engine fitted to the high performance MG, etc., versions of the Maestro, Montego and SD1 Rover 2000.

It seems that the original 1·7-litre version of the 'O' series engine, as used in the Ital/Marina, was not as satisfactory as the 2-litre, for development as a performance engine, with electronic fuel injection or turbocharging. But a more urgent reason for the tax change will emerge next year when the British group launches the diesel version of the engine, which has been developed with Perkins.

This is an advanced direct injection design which promises exceptional economy, even by diesel standards, with good performance, but again it is based on the 2-litre engine. Ford is also expected to bring in a 2·5 litre Peugeot diesel engine for the new Granada next year.

Clearly, these engines ought to be encouraged but it is going to be a bit hard on the company car driver who has to take one only to find that his personal tax liability has been significantly increased as a result. (Alternatively, however, they could be especially attractive to motorists running their own cars on a mileage allowance linked to engine capacity).

So even if the Chancellor can't bring himself to change the c.c. ratings for petrol cars, there could be a case for setting different categories for diesel models.

Partly because of the heavy demand for heating oils this winter, aggravated by the coal strike, prices of diesel fuel almost caught up with petrol, but in the past few days, the gap has widened again. Even with nearly similar fuel prices, the extra mileage of the diesel car should still make it the more economic choice for the high mileage motorist.

Another factor, I was told when I visited British Car Auctions' headquarters on the day after the Budget, is that used diesel cars are now fetching much better prices than similar high mileage petrol models.

"Diesels are the big story now," said B C A's sales director, Mr Tom Madden. "Yet we still get lots of two-year-old petrol models coming in with 40,000 miles or more on the clock. Realistically, these people should be running diesel cars now."

Although diesels are more costly to produce, the gap should narrow as a result of the forthcoming more stringent control of exhaust emissions. Diesel cars should not need the expensive catalytic converters that many petrol cars will have to fit, while the resulting performance drop in these "muffled" petrol models will also reduce their acceleration advantage over the diesel.

Putting a turbocharger on the diesel engine reduces the performance gap still further though it raises the price, of course. I have been trying a particularly spritely example, the Mitsubishi Colt Galant which, incidentally, also comes within the 1800cc company car tax bracket.

This roomy, medium sized saloon, with its 82 bhp turbo diesel engine capable of 103 mph, was more than a match on the road for most petrol cars, yet was still averaging nearly 45 mpg in mixed use. It costs £8,639 but an option pack including electric windows and electrically operated sun-roof, central locking and headlamp washers, is available for £960 more. Like most diesels, it is still noisy when idling, but smooths out at speed.

Another little Rover

AUSTIN ROVER could have a success on their hands with the latest version of the small Rovers. A few hours at the wheel of the new models indicated that they are significantly improved compared with the basic 1·3 versions launched last year, though a final assessment must await a full road test.

I tried both the 103 bhp Vitesse five-speed manual, which felt very lively, and the similarly powered Vanden Plas version, with the smooth and quiet ZF four-speed automatic. Both use the electronic fuel injection version of the British 'S' series 1·6-litre engine. Although perhaps not quite as smooth as the exceptionally sweet smaller Honda 12-valve, it is a generally refined and responsive unit with a good reputation for fuel economy.

Both cars are nicely trimmed and finished, with the obligatory walnut door strips and in the case of the Vanden Plas, leather upholstery. Development work on the rear suspension appears to have eliminated the high speed floppiness of the original model, especially in the Vitesse, with its rear anti-roll bar and chunky-looking new Pirelli P8. The grip seemed outstandingly good though I fear the car would still not win a prize for ride comfort—it felt bumpy at times.

With the front seats right back, rear legroom is a bit restricted but boot space is reasonable. However, not everyone wants a big car, and the latest Anglicised mini Rovers should appeal to motorists seeking a compact but lively car with a touch of traditional British class and good fuel economy.

BMW's fuel-injected 'superbike'

MOTOR CYCLE sales have been in the doldrums for some time but one of the exceptions at the quality end of the market has been the expensive but well made BMW machines. My colleague CHARLES LAURENCE, an ardent motor cyclist has been trying the latest versions of the famous BMW twins, which have just arrived in Britain. He writes:

The motorcycle division of BMW has launched a new version of their venerable "boxer twin" model following the success of its all-new four-cylinder fuel-injected "superbike" last year.

BMW, who made motorcycles before cars, is now established as the leading European manufacturer to have survived the Japanese onslaught of the '60s and '70s.

The two new 800cc twins just launched, one touring model with a full fairing, the other in basic trim, can trace their design roots back to 1921 when BMW produced the first "boxer."

Liberated from the need to compete against the Japanese with the twin in the horsepower race, BMW has actually cut the power to 50 bhp — the K makes 90 — to fit the lower German insurance bracket and it has produced the smoothest, quietest and most flexible "boxer" yet.

The traditional engine has been housed in a chassis incorporating the modern technology of the 'K', with single-strut suspension at the rear and heavily braced, firmly damped telescopic forks in front.

The result is a delight to ride, proving once more that the old motorcycling virtues of light weight, low centre of gravity and a flat torque curve rather than high peak power can more than equal the on-the-road pleasures of the 120 bhp, 150 mph "superbike."

BMW expect to sell four of the twins to every six of the four-cylinder machines. They are aimed at consolidating the traditional BMW market while the 'K' does battle with the Japanese and many will find that the smaller motorcycle is in fact a better machine on both the city street and the twisting 'A' road.

BMWs, usually some 50 per cent more expensive than the Oriental equivalent, have become the machines favoured by the experienced rider—hence their popularity with the police who have to ride in all weathers —and the choice of the executive who wishes to ride to work in a pin-stripe suit.

The basic R80 twin is priced at £3,105 (including tax) with the faired model at £3,620. The 'K' models range from £3,725 to £4,750.

1300cc, 4-cylinders, 12 valves, so what?

So you have one of the most advanced engines of its size in any family car today.

Most 4-cylinder engines have only two valves per cylinder.

By designing an extra valve per cylinder into the Corolla we've made it more economical, more powerful, and smoother to drive.

In fact, smooth is the word for everything about the Corolla.

You can go through the 5-speed gearbox like a hot knife through butter. And the clutch is light and very forgiving in stop-start conditions.

Together with front wheel drive and a host of little luxuries which come as standard, you're getting a lot of car for £5,250.

You can't say "so what" to that. Especially when you have six Corollas to choose from.

FIRMS AID ARTS IN REGIONS

By KEITH NURSE
Arts Correspondent

MORE than half of the £2,500,000 new private sponsorship aid for the arts which has been attracted by the Government's incentive scheme has gone to projects outside London, the Earl of Gowrie, Arts Minister, announced yesterday.

This dispelled the myth that regional arts and museums could not attract sponsorship. Lord Gowrie was speaking at a reception at the Guildhall in London at which he announced a further 35 grant awards for schemes which have brought more than £400,000 in sponsorship.

Pound for pound

A total of 57 awards have been made during the first six months of the scheme, which is designed to provide a stimulus in the form of "challenge money" by the Government, matching funding on a one to three basis contributed by the business world.

Under recently announced changes, matching grants on a pound for pound formula will be made from April 1 for new sponsorships of more than £1,000 from companies which have not before sponsored the arts.

The £1 for £3 awards will continue for existing sponsorship and new sponsors after their first sponsorship involvement. The upper limit on Government contributions remains at £25,000.

Permanent exhibition

The Ironbridge Gorge Museum won an award of £21,000 for sponsorship from Lloyds Bank, Lowe and Fletcher and Private Patients Plan, for recreating a late 19th century bank, locksmith and surgery at the museum.

Lord Montague's National Motor Museum at Beaulieu received a £20,000 cheque for sponsorship by the Wincanton Group for a special permanent exhibition recounting the story of the commercial vehicle on the roads of Britain.

Six £25,000 awards were among the 35 allocations announced yesterday. They were: Commonwealth Institute (sponsor—I B M Area South); Palace Theatre, Manchester (Norwest Holst); British Film Institute (Thorn-E M I); London Festival Ballet (Barclays Bank); Royal Photographic Society (Kodak Ltd); and Courtauld Institute (Arthur Anderson & Co. Foundation).

Countryside charter lists legal rights

By ROBERT BEDLOW
Estates Correspondent

MORE than £50,000 has been spent by the Countryside Commission to spell out the legal rights of people using public footpaths, bridleways and byways in England and Wales.

In an attempt to "cool down" the conflict between the growing numbers using the countryside and farmers and landowners, the Commission yesterday launched its Countryside Access Charter.

Printed in English and Welsh, half-a-million laminated fact cards have been printed for free distribution. The cards give details of the rights and wrongs in using the countryside, and what legal rights apply.

The publication of the Charter follows the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which gave the Commission responsibility for informing the public of its right of access to the countryside.

Move welcomed

The move was welcomed by the National Farmers Union and the Country Landowners Association, along with Countryside Link, which represents more than 30 voluntary organisations concerned with access to the countryside.

Mr William Waldegrave, Environment Minister, said that it was important that the rights of the public to the countryside should be tempered by the need of those who own the land to protect their business.

"The demand for access to our countryside has never been greater. What we have to do is to protect rights of access, above all to protect our ancient network of rights of way, without damaging the countryside itself or the livelihoods of those who work there," he said.

A booklet explaining the Charter is available free from the Commission's Publications Despatch Department, 19/23 Albert Road, Manchester M19 2EQ.

GEMS HELP TO BUY LIFEBOAT

By ALISON BECKETT
Art Sales Correspondent

A GIFT of a fine collection of jewellery from a 73-year-old widow to finance a new £390,000 Arun-class lifeboat for Newhaven, Sussex, realised £198,300 at Phillips in London yesterday and the owner has offered to make up the difference.

Among the best pieces given by Mrs Esme Anderson, a Londoner, to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution for the boat, which is to be named after her late husband Keith, was a Victorian diamond tiara which fetched £17,000. Her emerald ring was unsold at £85,000.

Two pictures from the collection of Mr Alex Herbage, 54, an investment broker, were among the highlights of Christie's Impressionist and Modern sale in London where they made £61,000.

Mr Herbage, who set up an arts centre at Sutton Manor in Sutton Scotney, Hampshire, two years ago, owns two companies which were wound up this week.

Top price in the same auction and a record for the artist was a beach scene by the Belgian painter Theo van Rysselberghe, 1887, which had been inherited by the vendor's wife and went for £80,000 against an estimate of £25,000-£35,000.

Count's collection

At Christie's South Kensington a group of African textiles collected by 19th century adventurer Count Napoleon de Cardi proved the outstanding feature of a tribal art sale, the most expensive being a Yoruba man's robe at £1,400.

WAY OF THE WORLD

A Missed Chance

IN HIS maiden speech in the House of Lords, it is said, the Bishop of Durham was advised to steer clear of "controversial" religious matters (this last pronouncement, that the Second Coming was "symbolic," though as controversial as any, seems to have passed unnoticed).

So what does he do but nag on about a Report of the Science and Technology Committee and the importance of training for the new technology by a "general insistence on literacy and numeracy"? It is clear, he said, that to "have the sort of collaboration that is required between the arts, social sciences, applied science and so on (sic) they must be able to develop in the artist a sense of what it is to be numerate.

"There will have to be a considerable shift of priorities in universities and polytechnics. This inevitably could be painful . . . There is no doubt that the proposals in this Report, if followed up on the broadest possible front, will contribute greatly to the development of the sort of society . . . needed for a creative and imaginative future."

Was there ever such waffle? It was as though the spirit of Lord Snow, with his "Two Cultures" and his dictum "technology is the sole hope of the poor", had risen from the dead. Oh for a Leavis to blast him with words of irony and scorn!

There is certainly nothing "controversial" about the Bishop's view of the importance of science and technology and universal numeracy, and of priority in education for the calculating and gadget-making faculties of the human race. It is the received wisdom. To question it, to deplore its seemingly irresistible advance is to be regarded as a crank, and by this time a harmless one at that.

There was a chance for the Bishop to be truly controversial. He might have questioned it, in the name both of his religion and of truly human life and civilisation. He might have asked his fellow peers, at least, to pause for a moment in their worship of that received wisdom and look about them at the world which it has made for us and the worse world it is making for our children.

Dishonourable

"I HAVE never seen six more villainous, depraved or brutal faces in my life . . . When they got off their chairs and shambled out, they looked like a bunch of gorillas, with great baggy breeches and knuckles almost trailing on the ground."

This is an extract from the diary of Lord Mountbatten, now being serialised in the SUNDAY TIMES. It describes how he attended a ceremony of surrender by the defeated Japanese, and is accompanied by a photograph of Mountbatten, in his finely cut white uniform loaded with medal ribbons, accepting the surrender of their swords from two Japanese officers who certainly look scruffily dressed and unprepossessing in comparison. Few people would not.

But it seems to me that there is something repellent and dishonourable in describing a beaten enemy in such inhuman and insulting terms. Granted that the Japanese had committed appalling atrocities; granted that they could expect no mercy from the victors. But these officers were not savages; they were members of a superlatively brave people with an ancient civilisation who would have fought to the last and were beaten in the end by the sheer, irresistible weight of military technology.

Men of Many Names

MY colleague Peterborough's note on regimental nicknames reminds me of a regiment, or rather corps, now disbanded, which probably acquired more nicknames than any other in the history of the British Army—the Royal Army Tailoring Corps, "dreamed up" by Lt-Gen Sir Frederick ("Tiger") Nidgett, the "Hero of Port Said" in the dark days before Alamein.

Among the nicknames which can be mentioned in a column intended for family reading by the fireside were "the Rats"; "the Tapeworms," a reference to their quick-retracting multiple tape-measures; "the Treadlers," from their huge armoured, foot-operated sewing-machines; and "the Thimble-riggers" a reference both to their notoriously devious tactics and to their Corps anthem, "Thimbles Awa'," composed by Pipe-Sergeant-Major-Trouser-Cutter Angus Garfinkel, who also wrote that stirring song "Here's to the Lads wi' the Needles and Thread."

To the Germans, who learned to regard the "Ratcorps" men either with puzzled derision or derisive puzzlement, according to temperament, they were known as "the Grey Devils from East Ardsley Junction," from the name of their depot in the West Riding.

Mists of Antiquity

A DOUGH-EATING contest will be held on Good Friday in lovely, sex maniac-haunted Sadcake Park, Stretchford's "iron lung". This ancient custom, whose origins are lost in the mists of antiquity, has been revived by the city's Department of Tourism, Leisure and Amenity as part of "Spring Tourism Week", as Easter is now generally called.

The contest is open to all. The person who eats the most dough in two hours is entitled to keep any of his allowance of dough he has not eaten.

The custom, thought to date from mediaeval times, lapsed during the Second World War, when enforcement officers impounded all dough "excessive to entitlement". It is only one of many ancient customs which will be revived during the week. Some of them have been specially devised by officials of the Tourism Department.

They include grapefruit-rolling; tourism-orientated bardic song contests sponsored by Dr Glogwyn Goth-Jones, Archdruid of Stretchford, with a prize of a bardic deckchair; "spinning the web," a man-made fabric-orientated contest with a prize for catching the most flies; and "derunging", a ladder-orientated test of nerve in which contestants remove the rungs of extending ladders as they climb until it is impossible for any of them to get down to earth again.

Enough!

REPORTS that the London and Dublin Governments are moving towards agreement about the future of Northern Ireland have been discounted both by Mr Hurd, Secretary for Northern Ireland, and by Mr Nicholas Scott, a junior Minister, who described them as "substantially over-egging the pudding, which will help nobody."

It would be a small help for some people if the expression "over-egging the pudding" could be banned for an experimental period, and then, perhaps, for good. This culinary metaphor is, as far as I know, used only by politicians.

It exudes a stuffed, indigestible complacency, a rich, eructatory pomposity which can induce nausea and is a danger to verbal health.

BY LYNNE EDMUNDS

IN HER early seventies, Mary Spencer Watson still exudes an energy and pulsating interest in everything that must have made her such an exceptional child.

At nine, her curiosity led her to explore the stone quarries near her parents' holiday home in Dorset, a discovery that set the direction for the rest of her life.

She haunted the quarrymen while they worked: "I must have been a real pest," she said. "In the end they gave me a scaled-down chisel, punch and hammer of my own and sat me at a bench alongside them in one of their little stone houses."

Ask her now, just after a long-delayed London exhibition has added to her status (though doing little to ease the constant financial struggle), what is most rewarding about a sculptor's life and she can't think of anything.

'It's a compulsion, something you have to do. It's hard physical work and most of the time you are very cold."

The only concesion this tall, cheery-looking woman now makes to the discomfort and the effort is to work on her ideal material—Purbeck Freestone—only in the summer. In winter she retires to her indoor studio, converted from the old dairy of her 17th-century Dorset manor house, to carve wood.

But it is the Purbeck stone that is her real delight. Visit the local quarry with her to choose a block — the same quarry she first discovered in childhood—and you see the respect the quarrymen have for her knowledge.

"She really understands stone . . . she can still teach me a bit about it," said Colin Landers, third generation of a traditional Dorset quarry - owning family.

"The stone has to come from fairly deep in the bed, with a good width, so that when I put it up on edge I get the height I need," she explained.

The textured look of the stone which Mary loves so much comes from the fresh water formations of shell life, including winkles, which lodged when the area was one huge lake.

A tour with her in the surrounding area, near Poole, is like a geological excursion. She points out where the marble runs along the line of the lovely Purbeck Hills, where the limestone outcrops, and where the chalk is found.

After studying in Paris in the Thirties, she came back fired with an appetite to express herself in stone but instead found that, because of wartime circumstances, she was forced to farm.

These days she has given up farming but there are the horses she still loves to ride; the goats she once bred but has now reduced to three.

Her exhibition earlier this year at the New Art Centre in London's Sloane Street, described by critics as "impressive," and showing "a clean appreciation of line and urgency of expression," had a charming sculpture of a smiling baby seal, modelled on one that recently frolicked with the children off her local headland; an eagle, wings furled, that was a study in controlled power; and a huge donkey's head with an uncomfortably primeval feeling.

But the most moving pieces explored one of her favourite themes: the closeness that can grow between children and animals. She does not pretend to understand this mutual tenderness but it certainly shines through in works like Boy with Kid, where the tiny creature snuggles into the child's neck. Not surprisingly, the £2,000 plus piece was the first to be sold from her exhibition. (Some of her work is still on view at the New Art Centre).

Many of the animals she sculpts are mythical, like the "magical eland" with a child on its back she was commissioned to do for a Poole school. Going back to another school recently to wipe off a moustache which a centaur had acquired, she was delighted to see from rubbed areas on its back that children had taken to sitting on it.

To her this demonstrates success in what she is trying to do — to "mediate" between children and the normally ugly anonymous school buildings they now have to inhabit — when they strike up a relationship with her stone animals.

Mary is happiest when her work is displayed outside. In a corner of her own secluded garden is one of her gently-haunting male figures; A Youth, with what she describes as "an archaic Greek look," a reminder of her days in Greece in the Fifties.

Living alone, she describes herself happily as "a loner who stays on her patch." And although she insists that sculpture is "practically obsolete because it takes so much time" and frustrating because her output is so much less than a painter's, you do not doubt for a second that she is a thoroughly contented person.

Clinics with a mission: to make men more healthy

MORE and more evidence points to the surprising fact that the most neglected group in this country when it comes to monitoring of present and prospective health is men between the ages of 35 and 60.

In part it is their own fault: they also have the lowest rates of attendance at their GPs'. But men are also more at risk from a variety of conditions (and potentially self - destructive habits) than are women.

Male reluctance to go for regular checks to their G P or under private health insurance schemes is seen by the medical profession as a fear of showing weakness by admitting to any problems, or embarrassment about talking about health.

But pioneers around the country, many meeting for the first time at the "Men Too" conference at the Institute of Education in London on Friday, want to redress the balance. From male health visitors and nurses, to Family Planning Association workers, they have started up clinics to meet men's needs.

These Well Men clinics are very much a parallel to the long-established Well Woman clinics at hospitals and health centres.

An early pioneer was Dr Michael Hall of Shebbear in Devon. He and a fellow G P in a very rural practice realised five years ago that men were not catered for. Co-operating with a health visitor, who runs the clinic, they circularised all men in the practice between 35 and 60. Initially they got a 70 per cent. response; now, as the men come up for their second check, response is rising to 90 per cent.

"Everyone gets a personal evening appointment and is monitored for weight, blood pressure and diabetes. They have information on exercise, methods of giving up smoking and a healthy diet including alcohol level," Dr Hall explained. He believes many have cut down smoking.

People found to have any risk factor are called back more often for re-checking then every five years.

Glasgow Well Men's clinic was set up a year ago, for rather different reasons.

Health visitors Bill Deans and Robert Hoskins were getting concerned about the reducing health and morale of the out-of-work men in their area of the city, an area where the unemployment rate is around 50 per cent.

"We could see how the deterioration in diet due to lack of funds and the tensions and pressures felt by men at home for long periods were building up and harming their health," Bill explained.

They got permission to open a National Health Service clinic on Tuesday afternoons, took a random selection of names from G P's lists, and their first surprise was that 75 per cent. of those who attended were men in jobs.

"The fact that heart disease is the biggest killer in Scotland and that this region, Strathclyde, has one of the highest rates in the country, might be relevant."

Apart from general checks, the clinics note eyesight and hearing capacities, get the men to give a detailed account of their daily habits, take notes of their family history plus any tendency to inherited conditions.

Their next step, he hopes, when their work has been evaluated at the end of this first year and the clinic put on a permanent footing, will be to offer family planning services and advice for men.

"We won't just offer free contraceptive aids, we will talk to them about their emotions too. We hope to attract a lot of younger men that way, and get them to work out the part they should play in their relationships.

"In the future we plan to set up self-help groups, so that men can help each other to keep up progress," Robert explained. Many men are invited to come to the clinic: those spotted in the families both of them visited.

One of their most spectacular "rescues" was a 26-year-old who was two stone overweight, smoked 150 cigarettes a week and took virtually no exercise. Tests showed he had high blood pressure and high levels of cholesterol.

"We referred him to his G P and the cholesterol clinic at the local hospital. Now he has changed his diet, lost two stones, and both blood pressure and cholesterol are normal."

Without that check he would have been a prime candidate for a heart attack in early middle age.

One of the newest and more specialised Well Men clinics, run in Manchester since last November by District Nurse James Boggs, was triggered off by the cool reception he saw men received at the normal N H S family planning centre.

"So we set up to offer men three services: the barrier method which is not available free from G Ps, help with sexual problems, and information and help with vasectomies." He found that many G Ps, particularly in the ethnic communities, frowned on patients asking about the latter.

So far, about a third of the men contacted by the clinic have come for appointments. They are aged anywhere from 20 to 60 but mostly are between 20 and 35.

"On our first evening we saw 16 men, more than had turned up at the general family planning clinic in a year."

The clinic is so well integrated within the N.H.S that men asking for vasectomies can now get them within a month.

So successful is the experiment, they are already planning, as soon as funds permit, a second clinic in Cheltham.

A High Wycombe clinic which operates privately to offer men routine physical checks and a special blood test, started through the Family Planning Association and is still run by it. It also offers vasectomy and other contraception services.

"Our women clients for family planning at our Well Woman medical clinic said they would like the same checks for their husbands, and they have been very successful," explained Mrs Diogh Boothroyd. "We try to staff the clinic with male doctors, but don't always succeed since so few can fit in part-time sessions."

They ensure men can get an appointment within a fortnight, and charge £25 for the basic checks, which include cholesterol tests, and checks on liver function as well as on epilepsy and diabetes. They also feel it is important to give each man the maximum time from half to three-quarters of an hour to talk about his life style and problems.

In the 35 men aged 45 to 60 seen so far they have found five with high cholesterol, one with very high blood pressure, one with an enlarged liver and one with a prostate condition.

For men, lack of exercise, inability to offset stress, a greater likelihood of an unhealthy diet and a tendency to let smoking and drinking accelerate without noticing it — these add up to risky high blood pressure, hypertension, and early heart attack.

DOGGONE CLEVER

FOR THE DOG who has (almost) everything—a Doggy Bag, the latest canine import from America. This Doggy Bag is not something you shyly or shamelessly, depending on your nerve, ask for in a smart restaurant. It is the latest way to take your small dog out on the town.

The Doggy Bag, pictured in action by PAUL ARMIGER, is actually a harness, with handle, that fastens around the dog's middle with Velcro strips. When you reach a set of traffic lights, a revolving door, or any other of the architectural features that can turn dog-walking into an obstacle course, you simply carry the dog as you would a briefcase or shopping bag. You may have to endure the odd curious glance, but at least you will not end up with muddy paw prints all over your designer-label duster coat.

The man who introduced the Doggy Bag on to the U K market is Christopher Grieveson, who runs Town & Country Dogs, a Knightsbridge grooming parlour. Mr Grieveson spotted the product at a trade fair in Chicago recently and obtained the distribution rights in time to launch it at Crufts Dog Show in London last month.

It is available in four sizes: for dogs up to 8lb, such as chihuahuas and Yorkshire terriers; 8lb to 12lb, for schnauzers, for example; 12lb to 17lb for Scotties, cairn and Norfolk terriers; and 17lb to 22lb for cocker spaniels (and owners with arms like Geoff Capes). FOUR IN A ROW

LESSER MEN THAN Mr ARTHUR SCARGILL might have been tempted to lend reality to the reports that his ticket to the capital of communism had one-way validity. For lesser men than Mr ARTHUR SCARGILL might feel that after losing every ballot of their membership since the day they were elected there would be something to be said for asylum in a country where such matters are not left to chance. But Mr SCARGILL is made of sterner stuff. He was elected once for life: and life is no doubt what he means to make it. It is likely to take more than legislation to restore democracy to the NUM. But maybe the latest snub inflicted on the plans of the union president to make the membership subsidise the upkeep of those dismissed for violence will inspire his critics to defy him.

For the outcome of the ballot on his call to charge his members 50p a week to sustain the men the Coal Board declines to reinstate is in some ways more damning of the Scargill style of leadership than the three successive failures he incurred when he tried to get them out on strike. The Nottinghamshire miners and their allies in adjacent coalfields, who would presumably have voted overwhelmingly against the levy, preferred to display their independence with a boycott. But apart from that a number of Mr SCARGILL's usual stalwarts on the Left also opposed the levy. Ostensibly their calculation was that it would distract attention from the campaign to win reinstatement for sacked miners. In reality they seem to have identified the ballot correctly as yet another tactical miscalculation by their inept president.

It may well be that even so he will continue to stare down his critics. There is, after all, ample evidence of their collective loss of voice and nerve whenever they come up against his fan-club. But if that be the case the steady disintegration of the union into its component parts seems set to gain momentum. Satraps like Mr CHADBURN who suffer lost deposits when their coalfield's vote can help to pack a conference of delegates. Their influence on the conduct of the grassroots is hardly more effective than the claims upon their subjects of the exiled kings of eastern Europe. It is ironical that a man who professes to regard union solidarity as his bible should watch his union fall apart. It is an irony of his own contrivance.

BUDGET DOGMA

THE BUDGET DEBATE in the House of Commons was a predictably dull affair in which the Government's critics, whether from its own or the Opposition benches, blustered to depressingly little effect. The main thrust of contributions from Mr HEATH and his assorted allies was that the Budget was viciously deflationary when what was needed was a substantial, though responsible, increase in public sector capital investment. It is a pity that they could not be bothered to look more closely at what the Chancellor has actually been saying and doing instead of merely re-hashing their old speeches.

To begin with, contrary to superficial impressions the intended fiscal stance for next year is not contractionary but broadly neutral if the budget deficit is looked at in demand-weighted and cyclically-adjusted terms. There are obviously uncertainties involved in attempting such calculations, but a simplistic obsession with the nominal public sector borrowing requirement is bound to be misleading. The main change between 1985/86 and 1984/85 is that in the financial year just ending, £2·75 billion was added to the PSBR by the miners' strike which did almost nothing to increase demand, whereas next year an unprecedented £5 billion has been allocated to the contingency reserve, a good deal of which will undoubtedly be spent on activities carrying a high demand weight.

The real problem for demand in the coming year is not the supposedly "deflationary" Budget, but the tightening of monetary policy caused by the 4½ per cent. rise in bank base rates to defend the pound and the distinct possibility that sterling's weakness may now be at least partially reversed. It is these two factors — a rather accommodative monetary stance and exchange rate depreciation — which have helped to fuel the recovery during the past 18 months. If monetary policy remains tight with interest rates moderating only slowly, the pound stages a modest recovery and the Government succeeds in hitting its revised public spending targets, the economy could well begin to flag before the end of the year. It is presumably for that reason that the Chancellor has been talking about the possibility of some alteration in the policy mix which would allow him to relax his fiscal stance and increase his scope for tax cuts. The adjectives "inflexible" and "dogmatic" which have so frequently been used to describe Mr LAWSON in the past few days, fit his opponents better than they do himself.

MAJOR NICHOLSON

GIVEN THAT ONLY A YEAR OR SO AGO a Russian fighter attacked and shot down a civilian airliner which had accidentally strayed over Soviet territory, killing all 269 aboard, we cannot be totally surprised by the murder of a US Army officer by a Russian sentry in East Germany. There are one or two similarities. The Soviet Union lied about the circumstances of the downing of the South Korean Boeing, never apologised, and warned that if necessary it would do it again. There was no public inquiry. As far as is known nobody was blamed. This pattern of Soviet behaviour will be repeated over the death of Major NICHOLSON.

Predictably the United States has reacted with some anger over the Ludwigslust incident, and there will be heated diplomatic exchanges associated with the cold war era of the 1950s and 1960s. The East-West euphoria surrounding the appointment of Mr MIKHAIL GORBACHEV as Soviet leader will be a little dampened. Moscow, in fact, appears already to be ignoring President REAGAN's several invitations to a summit, and in Geneva the Soviet negotiators have been busily accusing the United States of trying to back out of its promise to negotiate all aspects of arms control without preconditions.

Yet this tragic incident, like the destruction of the airliner, is not part of some diabolical scheme devised, and ordered, by the ruling Politburo to slow up a threatened thaw in East-West relations, or to quieten fears of the hardliners in the Soviet military-industrial complex. The Soviet sentry, like the comrade fighter pilot, had been reared to accept that the Soviet Union is the bastion of peace constantly under siege by subversive and hostile forces, and when in doubt to shoot. There was no justification for killing Major NICHOLSON, and one would like to think that responsible Russians must know it.

The challenge that Sir Keith has chalked on the blackboard

By JOHN IZBICKI

UNLIKE some politicians, Sir Keith Joseph is not out to make a fast political buck. If he were, he would not have published yesterday his White Paper on education — when schools are in turmoil and teachers are so thoroughly demoralised that they are unreceptive to the radical reforms contained in its 95 pages.

Sir Keith looked surprised, even a little hurt, when I suggested that to re-emphasise his belief that "a significant number of teachers" were underperforming and to wrench away some of the powers traditionally and jealously guarded by local authorities, might well attract further criticism.

Sitting unperturbed behind the cluttered desk of his modestly furnished office 12 storeys above Waterloo Station, the Secretary of State for Education and Science argued that central and local government formed a partnership and that it was his duty under powers vested in him by the great 1944 (Butler) Education Act to make sure that the education offered to the nation's children was of acceptable standard and delivered by properly trained teachers.

Above all, he wants to eliminate underachievement of every kind, the first Minister to tackle properly the scandal that the average qualification obtained by Britain's school leavers is a Grade 4 pass at CSE. "I hope that what we are doing is putting in place a number of building bricks that will by the end of this decade have begun to make serious inroads into underachievement," he told me.

Stopping political bias

"We want to stretch not only the able but also the average and the below average. And because a large minority of children (10 per cent.) leave school with no qualifications at all (a further 30 per cent. are very low attainers), the Government is putting in extra taxpayers' money to run a Lower Attainment Project already being tried by 13 or 14 local authorities."

So he has produced the present White Paper which, as a package, probably ranks as the most comprehensive document on schools since the curtain raiser to the Butler Act. Not only does it detail what should be taught in the nation's primary and secondary schools but how it should be taught. It promises legislation that will stop local authorities rigging school governing bodies along political lines — whether they be Left or Right — and give parents more power in the running of their children's schools. It deals with the new examinations that will give more children a better chance to demonstrate defined levels of skill, knowledge and understanding and that will broaden sixth form studies.

Sir Keith also tackles the question of school discipline and truancy and goes as far as to propose properly formulated policies on homework — a matter I have never known to be broached by any Minister of Education.

And just to make sure that teaching standards improve, he makes it clear that he intends to extend his existing powers for regulating the employment of teachers and "in appropriate circumstances" require teacher performance to be appraised by local authorities at regular intervals.

He still hopes that the teachers will return to the negotiating table to discuss a new salary structure and agree on the delicate matter of appraisal, for Sir Keith believes that, though most teachers are doing a tough job well, many could become a great deal better with a little help.

From teachers to parents. Why had he retreated from his original proposal to give parents the overall majority vote on school governing bodies? With his usual honesty, Sir Keith replied that he had relented because "I didn't have a friend in the country" to side with the idea.

"I'm confident about a number of things but there was nobody saying hear-hear at all. Well, that's unfair. My old Centre for Policy Studies (the think-tank set up by him and Mrs Thatcher) was the only friend I had — and they're not generally friendly to me."

Sir Keith has great faith in parents and hopes they will bring their influence to bear on schools where standards are low and underachievement high. He finds it scandalous that a "substantial minority" of children leave school after 11 years without any apparent benefit. "It is not just in parts of the ethnic minority communities that there is underachievement. There is gross underachievement in a substantial minority of the majority community."

But he acknowledges that not all schools are to blame for this sorry state of affairs and that some parents carry the burden of responsibility:

"I think there is a minority of parents who don't value education very much, who perhaps didn't have much benefit from it themselves and who, as a result, don't do the things that children and schools need if they're to function properly — they don't read to their children, don't talk to their children, don't encourage their children to try at school, don't support the school and in extreme cases connive at truancy . . ."

And if parental attitudes have to change, then too must the school curriculum and examinations. "It is a curious paradox that although the comprehensive school has drowned the grammar school, it is the grammar school curriculum the comprehensives tend to work to. The technical element has slipped out in most cases and knowledge is imparted in a way that is unrelated to the application of it — so that maths are taught as an academic discipline. Maths are there to be used.

"The curriculum needs to have a much more applied emphasis whether it is discussions in English or oral French or German or experiments in science or applied maths. Every subject should be taught for its application."

He did not blame schools for failing to do just that, but teacher trainers. Better in-service courses were now desperately needed. So desperate, that Sir Keith will impose specific grants for the purpose, forcing local authorities to spend them on teacher refresher courses and nothing else.

Radical exam changes

The entire curriculum would need to become more relevant to children growing up in a violent and selfish world. Examinations, too, would require radical changes. At present they are "norm-related," categorising children into graded slots.

"They don't tell a teacher or a parent or an employer what a particular grade or result means in terms of understanding or skills or knowledge. All a child will know is that if he or she is not in the top 20 or 30 per cent., there'll be no O-level. Well, we're transforming all that from next year to examinations with more criteria related grades, so there will be no limit on the number of children receiving a certain grade if they reach the standards required. It will be much more stretching and much more accessible."

So there, then, are some of the "building bricks" Keith Joseph is putting together to meet the needs of the '90s and beyond. "The theme of the White Paper," he says, as we part, "is really this: despite all the difficulties, there are some splendid schools working against all sorts of socio-economic backgrounds. Now if all the schools were as good for all abilities of children as those good schools are, we'd be riding high and the children would be benefiting. It can be done. It won't be done overnight but by the end of this parliament one should be beginning to get results."

If Sir Keith Joseph can achieve his ambitious goal — and it won't be easy to reach without the collaboration of the teachers whose financial frustrations are likely to be considerably further hardened by their Easter conferences — he will be remembered long after Rab Butler and his Act have been forgotten.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Truth grasped by electorate

SIR—Lord Alport's article (March 25) should not escape challenge.

Its significance lies in the manner in which it discloses identity of outlook with a small coterie of dissidents, whose general lamentations are unilluminated by precise details which would illustrate their vision of Conservative wisdom.

Does one have to point out that the policies which she is following are those proclaimed by her first administration? During that term she was assailed by just the same criticisms as are now voiced by Lord Alport: the monetarism was deplored, the attack on inflation was being pursued too intensely, divisions were being opened up—and so on. Yet what was the outcome?

When called upon to join in this inspired denunciation the electorate so far failed to follow suit as to return Mrs Thatcher with a mighty majority. Not much sign there of worries about "dismantling" of the Welfare State or of a desire to return to inflation and vast Budget deficits.

Surely it is time that Lord Alport and those who think like him should acknowledge the truth grasped by the electorate: that we were in danger of losing control of the national finance, that industry was over-manned, and that recovery could not even begin to take place until these basic faults were rectified.

It is a long task and it ill behoves anyone to belittle what has already been achieved and what, with sustained determination, can be won for the future.

Lord Alport's casual treatment of Mr Scargill's recent challenge to all of us suggests that his nostalgia arises through a cosy view through rose-coloured spectacles.

How will history view Mrs Thatcher? Surely, as the Prime Minister who had the guts to stem the tide of national decline and to erase socialist cant from Conservative vocabulary.

GEOFFREY CRANKSHAW
Ickenham, Middx.

Parents' part in child training

SIR—Baroness Warnock's Dimbleby lecture on education was impressive. I would, however, take issue with her on her categorisation of parents into two classes—the interfering and the apathetic.

Surely there must be a significant number of parents who are interested in their children's progress without presuming to dictate.

I also felt that she might have placed more emphasis on the important role parents have to play in the upbringing of their children particularly in the early formative years.

There is a sad lack of guidance or training facilities in this area.

ERIC D. MACLAURIN
Bridge of Weir, Renfrewshire.

Question and answer

SIR—In his comment on "The Richard Dimbleby Lecture" on television Mr Richard Last gives an example of why television can only deserve to be regarded in entertainment terms and not for the mature consideration of important issues.

Mr Last wishes to change the formula of a serious lecture delivered without any questions and answers, which he says is "anti-television," into one given with a "carefully structured" question and answer session.

We all know what that means. Acres of television time are given over to such sessions of instant response and counter response and we know how meagre are their long-term effects and usefulness.

Does not Mr Last appreciate that a lecture like that delivered by Lady Warnock needs time to reflect over and digest, and perhaps mull over further in the LISTENER reprint? It can be reasonably held that our society would be a whole lot improved if more time was given to consider the issues.

JOHN MILLAR
London, S.W.14.

Why teachers turn to their trade union

SIR—Further to Mr W. E. Bingham's letter (March 15) about the effect of cuts in education; if only the lack of heating and the shortage of books were all.

There is a shortage of money for general repairs and maintenance. Many schools have windows permanently broken or boarded up, broken doors and locks, and chairs and desks that are in a dangerous condition. Repeated complaints to the local education authority have little effect.

Teachers are required to do more, but are timetabled for less and less marking and preparation time. The extremes in temperature and generally poor working conditions lead to staff being susceptible to any bug or virus as well as stress-related complaints. The absence thus caused leads to even less marking and preparation time as we "cover" for absent colleagues, thereby increasing our own stress and susceptibility.

Most schools seem to have a core of disruptive pupils. Most local education authorities seem to make inadequate provision for these pupils so they are obliged to remain at school. Teachers are consequently called upon to be social workers and counsellors although many are not happy in this role and most have had little training for it.

No matter, when our counselling fails, we are blamed: when we are assaulted it is our own fault.

Poor working conditions can be better tolerated if the salary is reasonable. A poor salary is less depressing in pleasant working conditions. The proposed "contract" offers teachers very little apart from a "one-off" pay rise. If we sign away everything "voluntary" for an increase of even ten per cent. where will we be in ten years time?

When teachers are assaulted they are advised, by the local education authority to go to the union for help. Only when the union steps in, is any notice taken of complaints about our working conditions. And when faced with complaints from parents (often trivial, but on the increase) it is the union to whom we turn.

As a rule, local education authorities have no regard for the health, safety, welfare, well-being and morale of their teachers. It is the union who cares about us.

I take action not because I am underpaid and overworked but because education has been underfunded for years. Teachers' salaries are only a part of that.

Prison sentences

From the Minister of State, Home Office

SIR—I should like to assure readers who may have been disturbed by Judge Pickles' article (March 22) that it is emphatically not the case that the Home Secretary or his Department is seeking to persuade courts to avoid or shorten prison sentences because of prison overcrowding.

Our response to prison overcrowding has been, on the contrary, to undertake the first major prison building programme this century to provide the necessary places.

The Government fully accepts the principle that sentencing is a matter for the courts—subject, as they are, to general guidance from the Court of Appeal.

ELTON
London, S.W.1.

Bishops undermined

SIR—When the Prime Minister refers to Bishops of the Church of England as "cuckoos," is that not in itself a bad example?

The Bishops of the Church of England are the spiritual leaders of the nation and possess among their ranks some of the finest minds in that nation.

For the Government to undermine their national authority is to behave with the same sort of irresponsibility that it has found so abhorrent among trade union leaders, teachers and soccer hooligans.

If our politicians continue publicly to undermine the credibility of the Church's leadership, instead of embracing and supporting it, the level of spiritual impoverishment in Britain is bound to rise.

C. J. RYECART
Leeds.

Cuckoo in their nest

SIR—On reading Mrs Thatcher's reference to "Cuckoo Bishops" my immediate reaction was to say "cheap, cheap."

ALASTAIR M. DYER
Beaconsfield, Bucks.

Produce of Afghanistan

SIR—I bought a packet of seedless raisins. I notice that it is marked "Produce of Afghanistan."

What has happened to the raisins we used to import from Greece and Italy? Are they saving them for an EEC "Raisin Mountain"?

(Mrs) E. C. MASSA
Beaconsfield, Bucks.

Sufficient for old age

SIR—The reasons given by Mr J. W. Hardless (March 22) for not taxing pension funds apply with equal force to personal savings and investments made with the intention of giving a modicum of comfort and self-sufficiency in old age.

I wonder why those savings are not treated equally with pension funds so far as taxation is concerned?

ARTHUR H. DOE
West Wellow, Hants.

Raid on Dresden

SIR—I read with interest, mounting to indignation, the letters from Mr John Terraine and Mr Eric McMahon. I have not read your leader on the bombing of Dresden.

Although my country bombed cities in the United Kingdom such as London, Manchester, Liverpool and Coventry giving ground for retaliation through Sir Arthur Harris's Command, the actual bombing of Dresden in February, 1945, was unnecessary. The Russian forces were about 100 miles away and it was merely a matter of time before the city would be over-run.

The city itself had no defences and held about 500,000 refugees who had escaped the Russians.

Dresden had not been attacked and was considered a "safe" place to evacuate children and old people alike.

There were no adequate air raid shelters since, unlike Britain, no one in Germany was supplied with a free shelter by Hitler and apart from a few municipal shelters in the larger cities my people had to use the cellar or go out into the streets.

(Frau) GERDA VISSER
Ober-Ramstadt, West Germany.

Meals of yore

SIR—Mrs E. M. Binstead (March 14) wonders how we were able to withstand the rigours of the 1930s winters without central heating, double glazing and insulated walls.

Could the answer lie in our diet of those days? To start the day, bowls of porridge and mugs of milky cocoa with toast spread with mealy dripping. For dinner pies and tarts, the pastry made with lard, or stew with dumplings and savoury or sweet puddings rich with suet. Quite often for tea muffins oozing melted butter.

(Mrs) S. WITHNALL
Plymouth.

Fumes galore

SIR—We have a National Smoking Day every day (Mr George Meredith, March 22)—the heavy, poisonous fumes coming from the vehicles that clutter up our roads. No one bothers to estimate how many non-smokers they kill each year.

Personally, I think we should have 365 National Mind your own Business Days with an extra one in Leap Year. Then the world would be a better place to live in.

D. R. ELLIS
Manchester.

364 too many

SIR—Mr Meredith has so missed the point that he must be suffering from the effects of noxious tobacco fumes. There is no need to institute a National Smoking Day: we already have 364 of them.

MARK POWELL
Saint Breward, Cornwall.

Challenge unmet

SIR—The challenge of even one smokeless day proved too much for my colleagues. Anyone care to start Smokers Anonymous?

H. FOSS

B A sale may cost Minister's head

THE Government's plans to sell British Airways shares to the public this autumn might, paradoxically, claim the head of one of its most enthusiastic privatisers, Nicholas Ridley, the Transport Secretary.

Senior Conservative MPs believe that the flotation will prove to be the most important single act by the Government this year. But they wonder whether Ridley has the right political strengths for the task.

Ridley has had an unhappy time at Transport since his appointment in October 1983. His uncertain handling of issues such as the expansion of Stanstead and airline de-regulation have led even his political allies to question whether he possesses the skills needed to pilot BA into the private sector.

They expect he will be dropped or moved aside in this summer's reshuffle. The success of the British Telecom float owed much to Norman Tebbit's acumen and now the Tories are hoping that someone can be found to repeat that achievement.

LONDON DAY BY DAY

Labour pains

IS THE Labour party itself in danger of falling foul of the Commission for Racial Equality?

An advertisement in LABOUR WEEKLY under the heading "Candidates" seeks applications for nominations as prospective parliamentary candidates at Westminster North.

It goes on "Westminster North policy is to recommend that all affiliates only nominate women or members of ethnic minorities and we have instructed our executive to regard this as the key factor when short-listing. Party members are asked to apply accordingly, in particular those who are manual workers."

RAI, Italy's state-owned radio and television network, has caused some raised eyebrows in New York this week with a publicity launch of a concert at the Lincoln Centre entitled "Salute to RAI." According to the blurb, the list of stars taking part includes: "Romano Mussolini (son of Benito) and his jazz band."

No jobs for the boys

THERE WAS one irony politely overlooked when a group of unemployed teenagers from Merseyside visited Mrs Thatcher at Downing Street yesterday — among the officials and politicians there was no youth trainee to greet them.

Since Mrs Thatcher first proposed employing a number of school-leavers at No. 10 more than two years ago the idea has been blocked by the Whitehall unions. It was hoped that the youngsters could gain some valuable office experience that would help them find jobs.

But, it seems, some people who want more jobs for the young in theory pay only lip service to it in practice.

Green wellies

THE IRA's American mouthpiece, a hostile weekly newspaper called THE IRISH PEOPLE, is this week advertising what it calls "a unique conversation piece" — doormats in the shape and colour of the Union flag.

Readers of the journal who wish to wipe their feet on the British flag are invited to send $29·95 to an address in Philadelphia. The same issue, incidentally, offers packets of shamrock seeds at $5 and the proceeds from both items go to the Irish American Defence Fund, supposedly for the benefit of IRA prisoners.

Naff gear

In a recent pastoral letter he looked ahead to the Lambeth Conference in 1988 and conjured up images of a procession of bishops in rochets of lawn — "clothes that make even the leanest and hungriest man look like a pregnant laundry bag."

Irish diplomats are bracing themselves for an invasion of late guests. Invitations sent out for a St Patrick's Day reception at the Embassy, held on March 13, request their presence on Wednesday, March 30. Leprechauns in the system are apparently to blame.

A day in the life

MICHAEL WINNER, the film director, found the following messages on his desk on the same day last week.

Caller: Laura Hayden, Thames Television, 11.15 a.m. "Next Tuesday Daytime are doing the state of the British film industry. Would you be available for this? They record between 12.00 and 1.15 in the afternoon."

Caller: Laura Hayden, Thames Television, 12.07 p.m. "Daytime goes out at 2.30 p.m., fully networked, so it is recorded earlier."

Caller: Laura Hayden, Thames Television, 3.37 p.m. "They have abandoned the programme about the state of the British film industry because they cannot find enough people interested to take part."

Letting off steam

THE DEATH of Lord Beeching prompts a reader to tell me of a message she saw at the height of the "axings" on a blackboard at a tiny halt on the old Worcester to Leominster line.

It read:

Bad baby Beeching
Needs a bit of teaching.
He's got it in his silly brain
To wreck the British Puffer Train.

My correspondent tells me that the line was often used by bird watchers and botanists and she adds: "I have never forgotten this effort by some sad and indignant old railwayman on a station where the Victorian naturalists had been wont to alight to start long rambles to the secret orchidaceous dingles "far in a western brookland."

"And the winner is Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart."

Deep draught

THE WORLD attention captured by the raising of the Mary Rose has all but eclipsed a number of other fascinating maritime recovery schemes, according to Frank Carr, chairman of the World Ship Trust.

Not least among them is a joint venture by Oxford University and the trust at Giglio Island between the Italian coast and Corsica where the keel of an Etruscan wreck of 600 BC has been discovered.

The wreck — possibly the oldest deep-sea merchantman ever found—is 60 metres down and lies next to what may be a 3rd-5th century AD Roman wine trading vessel—although whether the cargo is still drinkable or not, Carr is not sure.

Polished performance

A REPORT on the activities of Stockton Brook Women's Institute in the LEEK POST AND TIMES says intriguingly "We had a lovely colourful evening with the Spode Audio Visual show. Mr Trigg showed us some lovely slides to music."

Entry curbs on foreign doctors start next week

By DAVID FLETCHER Health Services Correspondent

STRICT controls to limit the number of overseas doctors and dentists working in Britain were announced yesterday by Mr Fowler, Health and Social Services Secretary.

The Government is to introduce regulations controlling both the number of doctors from abroad and the length of time they can stay.

Doctors and dentists at present have unrestricted access to Britain provided they are suitably qualified.

Mr Fowler announced that from next Monday they will have to obtain work permits before being allowed to practise in this country.

Doctors and dentists who want to come here for postgraduate training will only be admitted for four years. After that will only be able to stay by applying for an extension under normal immigration and employment provisions.

Numbers decided

Discussions are to be held with the medical profession to decide how many overseas doctors are needed, how many should be allowed in for postgraduate training and how many medical students should be trained in Britain.

Mr Fowler's statement marks the end of a long period in which the National Health Service has been short of British-trained doctors and has depended heavily on overseas doctors, particularly from India and Pakistan.

A policy of expanding the number of medical and dental students began in 1968, and the medical schools are now training so many doctors — nearly 4,000 a year—that there are already more doctors than jobs available.

The new arangements will not affect overseas doctors currently working in Britain, and Mr Fowler said the NHS owed a considerable debt to them for making good the shortage.

About 12,300 work in NHS hospitals — nearly 30 per cent. of the total — and one in five general practitioners, totalling 5,670, qualified abroad.

'25 p.c. MORE ON NHS' PLEDGE

By Our Health Services Correspondent

A 25 PER CENT. rise in the amount of taxpayers' money spent on the National Health Service and a substantial cut in prescription charges — which go up to £2 on Monday — were promised by a future Labour government yesterday.

Mr Michael Meacher, Shadow Health Secretary, said the next Labour government would cut defence spending, cancel the Trident missile system, and switch the money to health care.

He said that these measures, coupled with an expansion of the economy to produce greater revenue, would raise an extra £3,000 million for the health service without raising taxes.

Addressing a two-day conference on private health care he said that a Labour government would squeeze private medicine but would not abolish it.

He said: "The National Health Service has been chronically under-funded for years

"We at present spend 5·7 per cent. of gross national product on health care and I shall aim to raise it to about 8 per cent., the level in France and Germany."

VAIN HUNT FOR CANCER WIFE

Mrs Philippa Kingston, the 32-year-old mohter who died of cancer after a positive cervical smear test was never reported to her, could not be traced because she had moved, it was claimed yesterday.

Dr Christopher Paine, general manager of Oxfordshire District Health Authority, said efforts were made to contact her about her positive test in 1979, but her address had changed.

'Amadeus' wins eight Oscars

By IAN BRODIE in Los Angeles

THE sumptuous production of Peter Shaffer's "Amadeus," about the life of Mozart, won eight Oscars at the Academy Awards in Los Angeles.

Three were the major prizes of best picture, best director for Milos Forman and best actor for F. Murray Abraham, a Broadway veteran who learned to play the piano so he could portray Mozart's envious rival, Antonio Salieri.

"Amadeus" also won for Peter Shaffer's screenplay, adapted from his highly-successful stage play, for make-up sound, art direction and costume design.

Forman first won for best director nine years ago with "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." "Amadeus" was made almost entirely in his native Czechoslovakia from which he fled after the 1968 Russian invasion.

Forman delightedly announced that Czech authorities will allow it to be shown, his first film to win clearance there since his departure and assumption of American citizenship.

Lean eclipsed

Sir David Lean's Raj epic "A Passage to India" which had 11 nominations, the same as "Amadeus" had to settle for two Oscars. Dame Peggy Ashcroft was voted best supporting actress for her role as Mrs Moore, and the film also won best original score by Frenchman Maurice Jarre.

Dame Peggy was not able to collect her Oscar. She was to have attended Sir Michael Redgrave's funeral in London yesterday, but missed that because she was ill.

Best actress was an exuberant Sally Field as the young widow left to support her family during the Depression in "Places in the Heart." She also won in 1979 for "Norma Rae."

'Killing Fields'

The other major category, best supporting actor, went to a non-actor, Dr Haing Ngor, a Cambodian refugee who survived experiences similar to those he enacted on the screen in "The Killing Fields". Produced by Britain's David Putnam, this war drama also won Oscars for cinematography and editing.

Dr Ngor thanked Buddha that he was there to receive such an award. Backstage, he silenced the Press by describing how he was tortured three times by the Khmer Rouge and how his fiancée died in his arms from starvation.

But instead of listing the nominees for best picture in the time-honoured cliff-hanger fashion, Lord Olivier looked straight at a card in his hand and despite cries from the audience of "no, wait" he simply announced the victory of "Amadeus".

James Stewart, 76, receiving an honorary award, thanked his fans for giving him a wonderful life and said: "I tried to develop my craft so that the acting doesn't show."

One victim of the "Amadeus" steamroller was Albert Finney in "Under the Volcano." He has now been nominated four times for best actor over the last 22 years but has yet to win. Another British loser was Vanessa Redgrave, nominated as best actress in "The Bontonians."

FLOORED BY 'FLU

Missing winners

Dame Peggy Ashcroft, 77, who was suffering from 'flu yesterday, said: "I am both delighted and amazed at receiving this award because it is not a thing I ever imagined would happen to me. I have, after all, not had a lot to do with films."

Dame Peggy, has recently won two awards for her performance in Granada Television's "The Jewel in the Crown."

A FOOTBALL thug who stabbed a rival supporter after a league match between Halifax Town and Chesterfield was sentenced to four years' youth custody yesterday at Huddersfield Crown Court.

Passing sentence on CRAIG SCOTT WHITEHEAD, 18, of Sheffield Road, Chesterfield, Judge GEOFFREY BAKER told him that he had made a vicious, cowardly attack

Mr LIONEL SCOTT, prosecuting, said that Whitehead, who supported Chesterfield, stabbed Mr Quick in the back with a Stanley knife, puncturing his lung. Mr Quick was taken to hospital and has made a complete recovery.

Custody replaces fine

A Watford supporter who appealed against a £200 fine for kicking a Luton Town fan during a match last October was sentenced to six months' youth custody instead by a football-loving judge at Bedford Crown Court.

Judge James Kingham told Christopher Vauls, 19, of Bowmans Green, Garston, Watford: "This is a prevalent crime, a cancerous crime. To kick someone in the ribs is very serious. Doing it in the explosive situation of a football match makes it more terrible.

INITIATIVE TO CURB VIOLENCE

By VALERIE ELLIOTT Political Staff

THE Government could threaten football clubs with legislation enforcing rules aimed at stopping hooliganism if the clubs do not act responsibly and independently to fight the problem.

The Prime Minister and a group of Ministers will talk with representatives of the Football Association on Monday and will offer ideas on how to resolve the growing problem of violence at matches.

They have been largely unimpressed by the suggestions drawn up by the FA in their 20-page report which was handed to Mr Macfarlane, Sports Minister, last week.

Mr Brittan, Home Secretary, will be announcing after Easter his recommendations following the review of the Public Order Act

BRICK THROWING FAN JAILED

A soccer fan who threw a brick at rival supporters was jailed for 28 days by Sheffield magistrates yesterday. Robert Ward, 23, of Lanbrell Avenue, Kiveton Park, near Sheffield, admitted threatening behaviour after Saturday's Sheffield United-Leeds match at Bramall Lane.

Protest at verdict on family of 3 gassed in cold

By ALAN COPPS

THERE were shouts of protest at a Southwark inquest last night after a jury was directed to return accidental death verdicts on a woman and her two children who died during a cold spell in a council flat with a faulty gas heater.

Mrs HELEN SMITH, 31, and her daughter NATASHA, 11, died of a combination of carbon monoxide poisoning and hypothermia, said Dr ARTHUR GORDON DAVIES, Southwark coroner.

MICHAEL SMITH, 13, suffered brain damage as a result of the same combination and died after four days in hospital.

Directing the jury after two days of evidence the coroner said the verdict of accidental death was the only one open to them.

He clashed with Mr TIMOTHY GREENE, counsel for the Smith family who suggested a verdict of unlawful homicide might be considered.

Shout of murder

The coroner told the jury he was "not prepared to accept there had been any evidence of negligence or such utter disregard for the safety of people as to justify returning any verdict other than the one I have given you."

When the jury gave its verdict after a short adjournment one woman at the back of the court shouted: "You lot murdered her, naming Southwark council. Others shouted "What accident?" and "It was negligence."

After the case Mrs Elizabeth Xavier, Mrs Smith's mother, said she would be taking civil action for negligence against Southwark council.

The inquest had heard from a series of technical experts that the heater in the Smiths' flat in Edmund House, Dodington Grove, Southwark, had been found in a lethal condition. It was said to have been working normally after an engineer called a month before the tragedy, which happened at the height of the February cold spell.

The council is now installing modern balanced flues to replace the open flues of heaters in all its homes. It is also checking all heaters on the Dodington Grove estate, but its representatives have been unable to gain access to 103 of the 290 flats.

Council officials admitted that the Smith's heater had never had a routine service in the five years since it was installed and blamed Government spending cuts for that omission.

BANQUET FOR QUEEN IN LISBON

By JENNY SHIELDS in Lisbon

THE QUEEN began her four day state visit to Portugal yesterday morning when the royal yacht Britannia slipped into the river Tagus, accompanied by two Royal Navy frigate escorts.

After reviewing an escort ship from the Royal Barge, the Queen and Prince Philip came ashore to be met by the Portuguese President, Mr Antonio Eanes, and his wife.

Three hundred riders from the national presidential guard formed a mounted escort for the short drive to Jeronimos monastery.

At this sixteenth century monastery two soldiers laid a wreath at the tomb of Camoes the national poet, on behalf of the royal visitors.

Before lunch, the Queen paid a formal call on the President at Belem Palace, his official residence, and then took an impromptu walk in the gardens which overlook the Tagus.

In the afternoon the Queen hosted a reception aboard the royal yacht for the Press corps covering the trip and then met 600 members of the British community in Portugal at the embassy.

Last night the Portuguese president held a State banquet in her honour at Ajuda Palace, the largest royal residence in Lisbon and the former home of the Portuguese royal family.

APART from a flood of company news, which prompted numerous share price responses, there was little to inspire further interest in London stock markets yesterday and some dealers suggested that investors were relapsing into the traditional pre-Easter malaise.

In the event, leading industrials drifted lower in the wake of routine offerings and the main market indices lost ground; the "30" index closed 7·9 down at 982 and the "100" index 7·4 lower at 1290·4.

Brokers were kept busy checking share values for clients as the information screens showed a constant stream of full year's results and interim reports and major names such as British Aerospace and Enterprise Oil reported annual figures well up to best expectations.

Pentland Industries was lively on United States expansion hopes: this company won THE DAILY TELEGRAPH 1984 Share Race with a 334 p.c. rise to 243p and the price has more than doubled so far this year to last night's value of 538p, a gain of 37.

After a fairly muted initial response to the results, British Aerospace attracted solid investment support and advanced 18 to 398p. Elsewhere in the blue chip range, British Telecom improved 3 to a high of 138½p, but Thorn EMI dropped 13 to 409p, after 407p, following a brokers' "sell" recommendation. Imperial Chemical Industries ended a few pence easier at 791p.

There was an early flurry in UBM on suggestions that the Norcros stake had been bought by a potential predator and the shares rose 10 to 160p before dealings were suspended: trading in Norcros was also suspended at 169p. Confirmation of United Newspapers' bid intentions left Fleet Holdings 14 higher at 298p, but United's shares lost 7 to 306p, after 301p.

In the drinks sector, Arthur Bell reflected disappointment with the interim figures and reacted 10 to 148p. Awaiting further developments in the bid situation, Matthew Brown improved afresh to 433p before closing unchanged at 428p.

Government securities had a very quiet session. Short-dated stocks were on the dull side, but later maturities were scarcely tested and remained unchanged throughout the session. However, the final tone was looking firmer in sympathy with an improvement in sterling.

In banks, Lloyds slipped 4 more to 540p on continued concern about the Argentine debt situation but small gains were showing in Barclays, at 592p, and National Westminster, at 627p. Dealers were pleased with the results from Standard Chartered and the shares advanced to 474p before closing 12 better at 469p. Manson Finance hardened to 27 on the interim report.

Trident Computer, a rising market before the interim results and the news of a bid approach, finished the session with a rise of 21 to 71p. Vague takeover suggestions accompanied gains in Ranks Hovis McDougall, 7 up at 158p, and Hopkinsons, 9 higher at 176p, while Tootal improved to 73p pending the outcome of the Entrad bid situation.

Talk of major asset revaluation in relation to the company's property interests prompted revived interest in Manchester Ship Canal, which climbed to 327p before closing 28 higher at 323p. Investment support in a thin market left Microfocus 50 to the good at 930p.

Stock shortage also accentuated gains in Sale Tilney, 18 higher at 588p, William Collins, 25 better at 775p, and Turriff, 10 up at 330p, the last-named on news of Bajan's increased stake. Follow-through demand after Monday's figures brought rises in Steetley, at 312p, and Hickson International, at 488p.

There were several major disappointments in the day's huge batch of company results, with W Canning 11 down at 96p, after 91p, Croda International 8 off at 134p, and Bemrose Corporation, also 8 down at 160p, after 143p: the last-named were particularly upset by the reduced dividend.

Poor interim reports caused considerable damage to the share prices of Cocksedge Holdings, 14 down at 39p, after 38p, and Pressac, 15 lower at 98p, after 95p. Brewmaker were 4 easier at 36p after their figures.

Dealers were satisfied with the results from Delta Group, particularly since there was no sign of a rights issue; the shares ended 4½ better at 138½p. Smith & Nephew were 2 firmer at 234p on the results and one-for-five scrip issue, while the rights issue announcement left F K I Electrical 1½p better at 47½p.

In the engineering sector, Burgess Products advanced 12 to 162p in appreciation of the good interim figures, while other firm spots included Vosper, at 225p, and Molins, at 138p, the latter ahead of results, due April 10. Babcock International became a nervous market in front of today's results and lost 8 to 144p.

City of Aberdeen Trust climbed 38 to 708p on the good results, while similarly encouraging news brought strength in Trade Indemnity, 35 up at 330p, and Iceland Frozen Foods, 12 higher at 444p, after 454p.

Concern about continuing high levels of mortgage rates and the prospective effect on consumer spending made for dullness in the stores market. Great Universal "A" reacted 12 to 667p, Woolworth 13 to 682p, and M F I 12 to 226p. Other sufferers were W H Smith, at 198p, Dixons, at 655p, and Burton Group, at 456p. Waring & Gillow reacted to 151p as some bid speculators closed their positions, but the shares then rallied to 155p, for a loss of 5.

Market dealers welcomed the results from Enterprise Oil and the shares rose to 209p before closing 3 easier at 202p: the explanation for the final loss was that speculators expect Enterprise to make a takeover offer in the near future, possibly for Tricentrol, whose shares rose 5 to 250p. British Petroleum slipped 5 to 540p, Britoil 3 to 215p, and "Shell" Transport 7 to 705p.

Paris Basin drilling hopes continued to stimulate interest in Invent Energy, which advanced £⅞ more to £10$\frac{13}{16}$. There was a disappointing market debut for Plantation Trust Units, which ended at 698p, compared with the offer price of 725p.

Gold shares were dull for most of the session, but were picking up in late business following a sudden jump in bullion, which ended $8·25 higher at $324.

Tailpiece

IN AUGUST last year, TAILPIECE suggested that the shares of Lucas Industries were worth supporting at 182p on a yield of 6·8 p.c., which we said was an attractive return for a blue chip group.

Since then, there has been further evidence of the company's recovery, while there have also been vague suggestions of a possible takeover offer from an American source. In the event, the share price has climbed to a peak of 289p, but in yesterday's drab market conditions was quoted 8 easier at 275p.

Lucas is due to report its half-yearly results tomorrow and there is a feeling that these could prove rather disappointing owing to damage caused by strikes in the motor industry. On a long-term view, we believe that the company will meet further success, but holders should be prepared for a possible short-term reaction if the interim figures fail to meet expectations.

Octopus sells shops for £9m

PAUL HAMLYN'S Octopus Publishing Group is selling part of Websters Group, which it bought for £21·3m last December, to W. H. Smith for £9m cash.

The deal covers Websters Bookshops, a chain of 15 shops, and Books for Students, a specialist supplier of paperback books to schools and libraries. The two operations made a profit before tax and interest of more than £600,000 in 1983.

Mr Hamlyn, Octopus chairman, said: "The main business of Websters is book distribution and that is what we wanted. We knew at the time W. H. Smith was interested in the shops so given a reasonable offer we are happy to sell them.

Trade surplus falls to £131m in February

By CLIFFORD GERMAN

EXPORTS and imports rose to record levels in sterling terms last month, and the deficit on trade, excluding oil, narrowed.

But a two-way squeeze on trade in oil widened the overall deficit on visible trade from £76 million in January to £270 million in February, and after allowing for an estimated surplus of £200 million on invisibles, the current account surplus shrank from a revised figure of £341 million in January to £131 million in February.

The figures were rather below City forecasts which had been expecting a rough balance on visible trade and a surplus of £400 million on the current account.

But sterling rallied after some initial losses against Continental currencies to close just over a cent higher at $1·1812 and its trade-weighted average was unchanged at 75·7 p.c.

Total exports rose 5·5 p.c. to £6,897 million, but imports were up over 8 p.c. to £7,167 million. Excluding oil exports went up 9·5 p.c. to £5·37 billion and imports 7 p.c. to £6·32 billion, reducing the deficit by £53 million to £951 million on the month.

But oil shipments abroad fell 6 p.c. to £1,455 billion and oil imports rose 20 p.c. to £847 million, slashing the surplus on oil by a quarter to £681 million.

Official sources were at a loss to explain the sharp turnround from January's record surplus, but bad weather affecting tanker movement, and seasonal maintenance programmes were not enough to bridge the gap, and it seems that low spot oil prices may have encouraged imports and discouraged exports of North Sea oil.

The sharp fall in sterling which plunged to historic lows last month had relatively little effect, as the unit value index of exports rose by 2 p.c. and the unit value of imports by 3 p.c., worsening the terms of trade by just 1 p.c. Oil export prices rose by 6 p.c. and oil import prices by 4 p.c.

Export volume overall was 4·5 p.c. higher and import volume 6 p.c. up.

Exports of chemicals, and both intermediate and capital goods rose above the average in February. Apart from fuels, imports were higher in most categories. Imports of erratic items rose by £79 million with erratic imports little changed.

Over the latest three-month period exports totalled almost exactly £20 billion, an increase of 7·5 p.c. on the previous three-month period, while imports totalled £20·7 billion, a rise of just 1 p.c.

Export volume rose by 4·5 p.c. and import prices rose by 3·5 p.c..

Compared with the same period a year ago, export volume has risen 8·5 p.c. and the export unit value index by 10 p.c. while the import volume is 11 p.c. higher than a year ago and import prices are 12 p.c. higher. Over the same period sterling's average value fell by just over 10 p.c.

Norcros expected to try again for UBM

By RA TICKEL

SPECULATION that Norcros may be about to make a new offer for builders, merchant UBM Group grew yesterday after dealings in both companies' shares were suspended pending an announcement.

Renewed demand for UBM shares following suggestions on Monday that Norcros was about to make a one-for-one share offer, saw UBM improve a further 10 to 160p prior to the mid-morning suspension, for a two-day rise of 21p.

This prompted calls for an inquiry from some quarters in the City, where opinion as to the most likely reasons behind the temporary suspension was divided.

Some observers believed the two sides were close to agreeing terms but most analysts thought Norcros has found a buyer for the 36·5 p.c. of UBM's equity it has held since failing to win control of the builders merchant group with a £75 million offer in the autumn of 1983.

Norcros paid around £26 million for its holding, valued at £34·5 million at yesterday's pre-suspension price. Having failed once to win control of UBM, the market believes Norcros would have to offer up to 200p a share in order to gain control of it now.

This would value UBM at £118 million against the pre-suspension valuation of £94·4 million, and compares with the £164 million price tag attached to Norcros, with its shares suspended at 169p, up 3, yesterday.

Neither side was giving anything away yesterday, but back in October, when announcing a 50 p.c. rise in first half pre-tax profit to £6·94 million just ten days before Norcros was free to renew its bid, a confident UBM chairman Allen Sheppard said: "if they want to come back then they should come back with a decent offer."

Norcros, meanwhile, disappointed its followers last December when it announced opening half pre-tax profits only marginally ahead at £14·1 million against market expectation of £16 million to £17 million.

Companies named as possible buyers for Norcros' stake included the now almost obligatory Hanson Trust, BTR, BMC, and Reed International.

Standard up 8pc to £290m

STANDARD CHARTERED yesterday produced slightly better-than-expected results with an 8 p.c. rise to £290 million in taxable profits for 1984, despite significantly higher bad debt provisions.

The bank, which still earns one-third of its net profits in South Africa and is vulnerable to political developments there, stressed that for the first time ever the contribution from America exceeded that from South Africa.

Both Stanbic, the South African subsidiary, and Union Bank of California produced "excellent performances," according to chairman Lord Barber. But a strong dollar gave Union Bank the edge.

In the City, Standard Chartered's results were described as "heartening" after an extremely disappointing performance at the interim stage.

The bank's shares, depressed in recent days by developments in South Africa, gained 12p to 469p yesterday after touching 474p at one stage.

There was particular praise for the very cautious approach towards the need for bad debt provisions. Specific provisions against identifiable problems rose from £108 million to £119 million while general provisions rose from £26 million to £51 million.

Standard Chartered confirmed yesterday that it has made a specific provision of 25 p.c. against its exposure in Argentina and Bolivia at a total cost of £14·5 million.

The dividend goes up from 28p to 28·5p after a final payment of 19p on May 17.

Fleet spurns United Newspapers' overtures

By JOHN RUDOFSKY

FLEET HOLDINGS yesterday spurned outright the move by regional newspaper group United Newspapers to prepare a bid for its Daily Express, Sunday Express, Daily Star and Morgan Grampian magazine business.

Lord Matthews chairman and the Fleet board said no discussions had taken place, although the two chairman were said to have spoken on Monday. He announced that in the absence of any details from United Newspapers a bid "appears to have no merit."

David Stevens, United Newspaper's merchant banker chairman, declared his intention to launch a full offer for Fleet Holdings on Monday. He did not give terms knowing a Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation into the planned move is inevitable.

Yesterday's Fleet's shares added 14p to 298p despite the feeling that a full blown takeover battle would strain United Newspapers' resources.

With its own shares slipping 7p to 306p, after 301p, United whose titles include the YORKSHIRE POST, PUNCH and EXCHANGE AND MART, is valued at £223 million.

Fleet is valued at £252 million, although United Newspapers starts off with a stake of just over 20 p.c., much of it bought for £30·6 million from Robert Maxwell.

Fleet's interim profits were good, results advancing strongly both from Fleet Street titles and the magazine business. Close observers of the company are looking for as much as £22·5 million pre-tax this year against £17·5 million last time. Fleet's balance sheet is healthier and the group still sits on a Reuters stake worth almost £120 million.

After consulting with advisers Kleinwort Benson, Fleet will write to shareholders shortly. Lord Matthews and his managing director Ian Irvine, (formerly of Touche Rossi, are expected to take a fiercely independen line and will therefore not court a "white knight."

BRITISH AEROSPACE, constrained by secrecy ahead of its May capital raising exercise and the sale of the Government's 48·4 p.c. stake, had to confine itself to the past rather than the future when unveiling 1984 results yesterday.

But there can be little complaint about an outcome showing pre-tax profits up from £82·5 million to £120·2 million during a year of higher launching costs when trading profit from civil aircraft remained marginal and after an increased loss from its space interests.

There can be little doubt, either, about 1985 prospects and projections that BAe should easily strike the £150 million pre-tax mark this year, and belief that margins can only improve within civil aircraft, should make the May offer popular—subject only to final terms and market conditions. The combined share sale and rights issue will soak up £500 million.

The rights issue will expand the group's equity base by no more than 25 p.c. and, because BAe has no specific targets and is merely co-ordinating its fund raising at the same time as the Government's offer, there will be income benefits from the new capital to swell further 1985 projections.

In any case the group now sports an order book of £4·82 billion.

Fears that BAe will be hindered by squeezed Government spending are not well founded. Ministry of Defence business accounts for only one-third of group business and there is increasing interest by other governments to suggest a strong sales pattern.

Exports to Africa and the Americas were especially good in 1984, which more than offset lower sales to the Middle and Far East.

Last year there was market excitement following bid indications from Thorn-EMI and subsequent talks with GEC. Both companies have now withdrawn, with little damage to BAe's share price, which yesterday was 18p higher at 398p, helped by a 50 p.c. increase in 1984's total dividend to 13·65p a share, payable June 5.

CITY COMMENT

BAe's results give May issue flight clearance

Cycles are long in the space industry and investors have to bear in mind the prospects for some years ahead. But on present evidence BAe is a satisfactory investment.

More thrust at County Bank

NATIONAL Westminster Bank has no intention of playing second fiddle to Barclays in the drive for a major role in the international securities markets, in spite of the noticeably more cautious approach adopted so far by its merchant banking subsidiary County Bank.

This was the message yesterday from County chairman Charles Villiers, who announced a 25 p.c. rise to a record £14·1 million in County's taxable profits for 1984 and pointed to the bank's remarkable rise to City fame in just 15 years.

Mr Villiers argues that County took a deliberate decision to buy two medium-sized City firms Bisgood Bishop and Fielding, Newson-Smith as the launchpad for its ambitions in the City, instead of buying the biggest and best in terms of stockbrokers and stockjobbers, as Barclays has done.

But the size of the firms acquired "is no reflection of how seriously we take the new opportunities in the City," says Mr Villiers. He believes it is simply easier to integrate a smaller group and move on from there than to risk biting off more than one can chew.

National Westminster is prepared to back County's move into the securities markets with capital of £150-£200 million "for starters," thus more or less matching the commitment made by Barclays. And if suitable opportunities to expand turn up, money is unlikely to be a constraint.

Roughly £25 million of capital will be devoted to becoming a primary dealer in the gilt-edged market with another £20 million earmarked for developing an international equities operation.

Luckily for County, National Westminster has the ideal City premises to house the newly-combined merchant banking and securities group. County Holdings, as it is to be called, will move into Natwest's prestige offices in Drapers Gardens, Throgmorton Avenue, early next year, becoming one of the few new City financial groups able to operate under one roof.

Natwest believes the development of an international securities operation is far more than a strategic step in the right direction. The bank expects County to eventually become a "substantial" contributor to group profits, providing possibly as much as 10 p.c. of total income.

County Holdings has roughly 1,000 employees but the numbers are expected to rise to 1,500 over the next few years as the group expands into the big league of international securities firms. It would be too much to expect County to eventually rival the giants of the business, like Merrill Lynch of Nomua Securities as they are based in the world's two biggest capital markets. But "we want to be in the top five in Europe," says Mr Villiers.

A challenge building up

BRITISH contractors could be in for a nasty shock as top international construction companies give up waiting for the mega-projects which have been curtailed as a result of world recession and begin to seek work in this country.

Until now British builders have been almost totally free from foreign competition. Indeed, there have been few major takeovers or mergers within the industry. In part this has been a result of the competitive nature of the family businesses which are the backbone of the British construction industry.

But there are now signs that Japanese and South Korean construction groups are eyeing the United Kingdom market. The evidence is that Japanese contractors have emerged as funders for large-scale developments in London.

This enables these oriental construction giants to gain a foothold in the property industry with a view to taking a far more active role eventually, possibly as a builder-promoter.

It was by this method that both Japanese and South Korean construction groups established major real estate holdings in California, where they have taken over frfom the Canadians as the most active developers and investors.

Top among the Japanese contractors are Hitachi Zosen Corporation and Chiyoda Chemical Engineering & Construction, while leading Korean contractors include Dong-Ah Construction and the Daewoo Corporation.

Meanwhile, the British construction industry will be watching with interest to see which Japanese company emerges as the partner of Glengate in the reconstruction of the former Bourne & Hollingsworth store in Oxford Street.

Thorn admits Inmos first-quarter loss

THORN EMI admitted yesterday that 84 p.c.-owned Inmos, the microchip company it bought last year from the Government, has made a small loss in the first quarter of the current year. But the group insisted internal forecasts indicate a profit for the year as a whole.

The group was stung into responding to reports of poor prospects for the semi-conductor industry and the performance of Inmos in particular. The fears knocked Thorn EMI shares 13p to 469p with the group lining-up Inmos for a partial share flotation.

Building Society savers' interest likely to rise

THE INCREASES in savers' interest rates announced by leading building societies are likely to be abandoned and replaced with even bigger benefits. This follows a decision by the Abbey National yesterday to raise some of its rates by more than the threequarters per cent. recommended last week by the Building Societies Association.

Other major societies and most smaller ones have already announced that all their savings account rates are to rise by the threequarters per cent. net of basic rate tax from April 1.

While agreeing yesterday to add that figure to its ordinary and high-interest accounts, giving 8·25 and 10 p.c. respectively, the Abbey is to make a 0·77 p.c. increase to its seven-day and highest ChequeSave rates to give 9·52 p.c. net, which gives a compounded annual rate of 9·75 p.c.

That 9·75 p.c. matches the rate being paid on the Leeds Permanent's Liquid Gold account and the Woolwich's Prime account.

Last night Halifax, Britain's biggest society, was reconsidering the threequarters per cent. increases announced last week and is likely to make a new increase to match the Abbey, the second largest society.

The other member of the Top Five, Nationwide, is not considering an immediate response to the Abbey but will almost certainly revise its rates if the Halifax does.

The Abbey deliberately waited until all competitors anounced their new rates. The society is following competitors in adding just 1 p.c. to its mortgage rate, giving a basic 14 p.c.

BP chief's bonus boosted by 32pc

His salary rose by £58,415 to £241,547, including a £50,000 bonus. His annual increase was in line with the 4½ p.c. cost-of-living rise for all BP staff.

The company's annual report and accounts also show that bonuses to directors were up to £52,500 but thousands of other employees also benefited.

It was also disclosed yesterday that Kennecott, the troubled copper business now part of Sohio, BP's 54 p.c. United States affiliate, has closed indefinitely its Utah copper division.

BP signalled earlier this month that tough action was in the offing to curb rising Kennecott losses which are still running at $40 million in the first quarter this year.

Reagan adamant on free exchange rates

By JAMES SRODES in Washington

PRESIDENT Reagan admitted yesterday that hte world would be better off with a lower dollar but he is opposed to a co-ordinated effort to control exchange rates.

Speaking in response to growing pressure in Europe for the industrial nations to adopt some sort of uniform policy aimed at currency stability, President Reagan said that the dollar will begin to drop on its own accord when other countries "improve their economies."

He also said that a review of the international monetary system is not a top priority with his Administration.

His comments appeared to be directed at recent reports that the Group of 10 has neared agreement on a plan to set up a committee inside the International Monetary Fund that would issue guidelines for more co-ordinated domestic policy action among the major industrial nations in order to promote exchange rate stability.

Pressure to return to managed exchange rates or some sort of currency fluctuation control has been picking up both in Washington and abroad but Mr Reagan's comments clearly indicated that his Administration is still committed to the free exchange rate system.

Wall Street's share prices, meanwhile, continued to sag under the weight of dollar concerns

Many of the country's biggest businesses have warned that that first-quarter earnings will fall short of previous projections

Given the dismal company news, investors held up fairly well and the Dow Jones Industrial Average managed to keep losses to a minimum. The Dow was off two points at 1287·18, shortly before the close.

Shell UK profits 'not good enough'

A RISE of 15 p.c. to £583 million in post-tax profits of Shell U.K. was not good enough, John Raisman, retiring chairman, said yesterday.

Profits should have been around £500 million, he added.

Higher North Sea oil production contributed to the profits rise. The exploration and production side of the business produced a pre-tax profit of £2·4 billion, £460 million up on 1983 but this was whittled down to £589 million after tax which totalled £1·85 billion (£1·44 billion) for the year,

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Enterprise priorities change

THERE was never much doubt that Enterprise Oil would knock its prospectus profits forecast into the proverbial cocked hat, the only question being by how much.

In the event profits at £62·6 million after tax are one-third higher than the £47 million estimate made last summer, while the dividend is more generous than promised.

The weakness of sterling against the dollar accounts for around 60 p.c. of the profits overshoot with the balance arising from earlier-than-expected production from the Hutton Field.

Not only in terms of 1984 profitability, however, is Enterprise a somewhat different animal than the one described in the prospectus. There it was made clear that production would peak in 1985 and would decline rapidly thereafter unless new interests were acquired.

But now Enterprise is saying that production will not peak until 1989 based on present interests and will remain above the 1984 level for the rest of this decade. Again the early start-up at Hutton is part of the story, but the greater part arises from mechanical difficulties at Beryl "B" which will lop up to 6,000 barrels a day off Enterprise's 1985 share.

The company has also put together an exploration programme amounting to around £50 million in 1985, enough to offset petroleum revenue tax in a highly efficient manner.

Drawing the threads together suggests that Enterprise is no longer so desperate for acquisitions and that it can take its time and pick its targets.

Stock market rumour has run the gamut of possibilities from Anvil through to Tricentrol, paying particular regard to TC Gas and Lasmo. Where Enterprise will settle is still speculation, but it is significant that it is currently sitting on £150 million of cash and has the potential to borrow £500 million against current collateral.

That suggests that an equity issue is relatively unlikely and once the market takes that on board the price should pick up smartly from its current 202p, where the prospective yield is 6½ p.c. and the price-earnings ratio only a shade above five.

Smith & Nephew long-term buy

MORE PEOPLE rushing for Elastoplast in the United Kingdom, increased numbers of sun worshippers boosting sun-tan lotion sales, and general increased market penetration across the board kept Smith & Nephew's record profits streak intact in the year ended Dec. 29.

The fourth quarter made up for a slowdown in the third quarter to see pre-tax profits finish the year at £55·5 million, against £44·6 million, and there is the traditional scrip issue—one-for-five.

This annual gesture may take a rest in 1985, but earnings momentum remains strong, and a firmer springboard into the United States markets has now been established following last month's acquisition of $57·9 million of Affiliated Hospital Products.

Margins overall have improved, and within medical and health care, Spanish interests, helped by increased business with North Africa, made a significant recovery.

Personal hygiene was not as strong as expected, but the cost savings programme is now over, market share has increased, and benefits should be seen this current year.

Toiletries, where operating margins advanced from 15·9 p.c. to 20 p.c., showed their best percentage growth for some time, and despite slack tender business from the Middle East the medical and other textiles division improved from £4·5 million to £4·9 million at the operating level.

Plastic and tapes could slow in 1985 as the United States suffers from dollar problems, but overall direction of the group remains forward.

Smith & Nephew is on course for £70 million pre-tax and at 234p, up 2p, offers a prospective price-earnings ratio of 17.

The rating takes full account of a group with the right products in the right places, but a buy with the long term in mind should not disappoint.

Arthur Bell modestly rated

THE last thing that Arthur Bell & Sons needs is problems with its newly-acquired hotel division, yet that is precisely what it has had to accommodate.

Already its whisky business is fighting for market share against a decline in demand at around 4 p.c. a year. The glass container division is only just about breaking even at the operating level, but clearly in loss after interest. The United States is proving a tough environment in which to launch the Bell's brand.

So in the short term, growth has to be generated by the hotel business, Gleneagles Hotels. The Gleneagles itself is going as expected, but the refurbishment of the 500-room Piccadilly has hit delays and cost overruns.

It closed in October and had been due to reopen at the beginning of May after expenditure of £10·1 million. In the event, it will not open until the end of June after refurbishment costs of £16 million.

Thus the current financial year to June 30 will miss out on two months of the London hotel boom, and earlier profit expectations for the group are having to be reined back.

Time market in any case drew little encouragement from the half time figures. Pre-tax profits are up from £19·1 million to £20·7 million, including a first time contribution of £2·17 million, pre-interest, from Gleneagles.

Bell's strength in whisky is rooted firmly in the domestic market where it is putting heavy promotional effort behind the brand to limit the damage being inflicted by the "cheapie" brands.

The only area of growth in the whisky business is exports, which did pick up during the half year. Even so, they account for only 18 p.c. of Bell's whisky turnover and the drive into the United States will take time, money and management effort.

The share price has already taken all that on board. Bell's shares peaked at just under 200p in 1983, and yesterday closed 10p off at 148p. There the prospective price-earnings ratio is around eight and the yield 5 p.c. — modest enough ratings but not yet an invitation to purchase.

Mexico considers loan for Argentina arrears

By ANNE SEGALL

MEXICAN Finance Minister Jesus Silva Herzog said in Vienna yesterday that a bridging loan for Argentina was "under consideration" to help the country meet mounting interest arrears to commercial banks.

The need for bridging finance follows the decision by the International Monetary Fund to suspend the first two instalments of a $1·4 billion (£1·2 billion) standby credit for Argentina because of its failure to meet IMF targets.

Jacques de Larosière, managing director of the IMF, says this meant that no money from the fund would now be forthcoming, at least until July.

Banks are concerned that unless Argentina makes progress towards clearing a backlog of interest payments estimated at around $850 million their efforts to help the country by putting together a $4·2 billion (£3·6 billion) commercial loan will be jeopardised.

Banks are prepared to reschedule roughly $13·5 billion (£11·5 billion) of Argentine debt over 12 years as well as provide new funds. Argentina owes the world $45 billion (£38·5 billion), making it the third biggest debtor after Brazil and Mexico.

Natwest $400m floater

NATIONAL Westminster successfully launched a $400 million floating rate note issue under new Bank of England guidelines yesterday.

The issue, which was increased from $300 million "to meet strong investor demand," is the first to test the Bank's tougher rules on subordinated debt.

The notes have a life of 20 years, with interest payable every six months at a rate of 3/16 p.c. over the London inter-bank bid rate, the rate at which major banks bid for funds. The issue was managed by County Bank, Natwest's wholly-owned merchant banking subsidiary.

● German-based foreign banks could be soon allowed to lead-manage Deutschemark Eurobonds, acording to Bundesbank president Karl-Otto Poehl, who said yesterday that the time is ripe for changes.

Mr Poehl made it clear that he expected reciprocity towards West German banks operating abroad, adding that there would be a reaction in case of discriminaton.

BP BRIEFING No. 2: ANNUAL REPORT

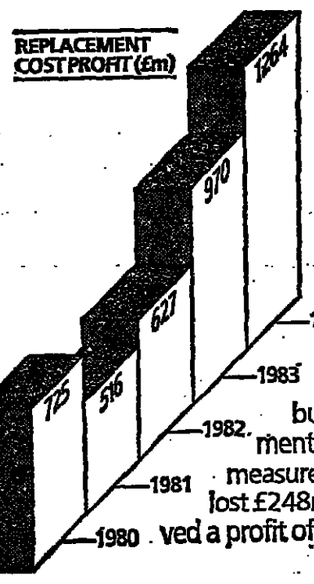
Profit after taxation

BP's financial results for 1984 showed a substantial improvement on 1983. Replacement cost profit was up by 30% to £1264 million. Historical cost profit increased by 62% to £1402 million. The difference reflects a gain in the value of stocks held which, in a year when the price of oil was under pressure, was mostly due to the strength of the US dollar.

Earnings from upstream exploration and production strengthened. In part this was due to the first full year's production from BP's wholly-owned Magnus field in the North Sea. Sales from upstream activity are made in dollars. Profits from these sales, expressed in sterling, benefit considerably from the strength of the dollar.

BP's downstream refining and marketing operations were profitable and show a considerable improvement in BP's competitive strength. Returns were still depressed by industry over-capacity and BP has recently announced further closures. For BP, as for the rest of the industry, the continued rise of the dollar against all European currencies meant that prices realised in Europe could not reflect increases in the local cost of oil.

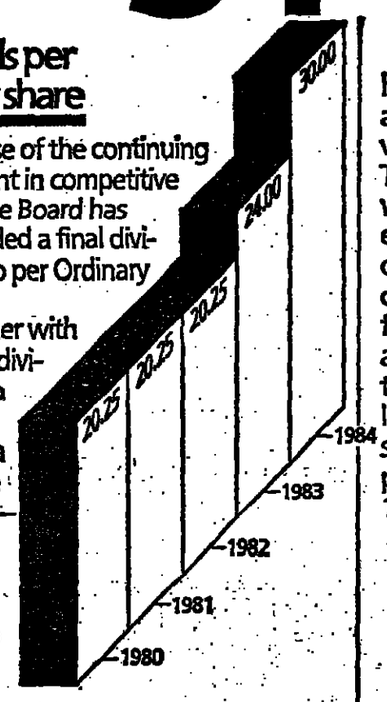
BP's chemicals business has also implemented major cost-cutting measures since 1981, when it lost £248m, and this year achieved a profit of £70m.



Dividends per ordinary share

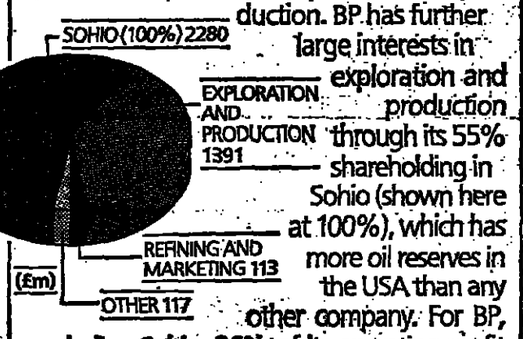
Because of the continuing improvement in competitive strength, the Board has recommended a final dividend of 20p per Ordinary Share.

Together with the interim dividend of 10p per share, this makes a total for the year of 30p – a 25% increase over the 1983 total of 24p per share.



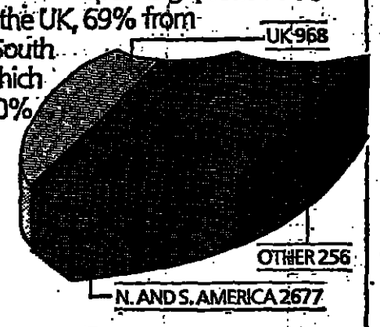
Operating Profit by Activity

BP's operating profits come largely from its direct interests in oil exploration and production. BP has further large interests in exploration and production through its 55% shareholding in Sohio (shown here at 100%), which has more oil reserves in the USA than any other company. For BP, excluding Sohio, 86% of its operating profit comes from exploration and production, with refining and marketing accounting for 7% and the remainder from other BP businesses.



Operating Profit by Region (£m)

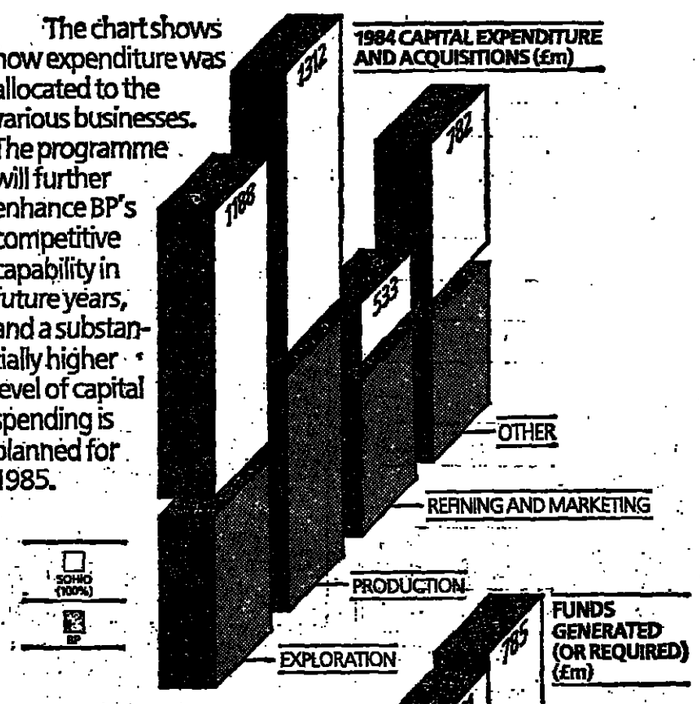
25% of the operating profit in 1984 came from the UK, 69% from North and South America (which includes 100% of Sohio's earnings) and 6% from other regions.



Capital Expenditure

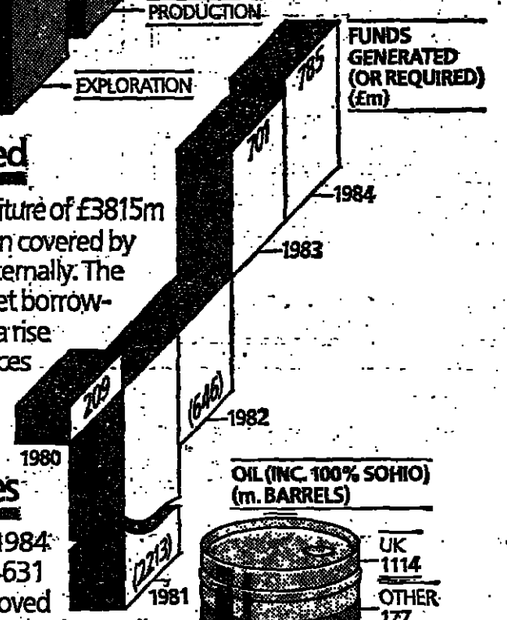
Throughout the year, BP continued to improve the strategic composition of its business by an active programme of capital expenditure, acquisitions, disposals and closures.

The chart shows how expenditure was allocated to the various businesses. The programme will further enhance BP's competitive capability in future years, and a substantially higher level of capital spending is planned for 1985.



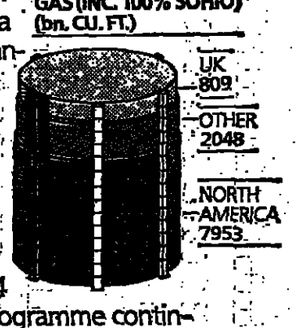
Funds generated

Capital expenditure of £3815m by BP was more than covered by funds generated internally. The excess, and some net borrowing, contributed to a rise in BP's liquid resources from £1200 million to £2300 million.



Proved reserves

At the end of 1984 the BP Group had 4631 million barrels of proved reserves. This represented a small overall increase after a year when 465 million barrels were produced. BP Exploration's share of these reserves totalled 1728 million barrels, located principally in the UK and North America. Its proved natural gas reserves totalled 3838 billion cubic feet, mostly in Australasia, North America and the UK. Substantial quantities of oil and gas, which have been discovered, cannot yet be classified as proved.



Current Exploration

BP Exploration's 1984 oil and gas exploration programme continued at a high level, with emphasis on the UK, Alaska, Egypt, China and Indonesia. Worldwide, BP drilled 195 gross (71 net) exploration and appraisal wells in 22 different countries, acting as operator in 11 of them. New leases were taken out in 15 countries.

COMPANIES

Reckitt £106m tops estimate

RECKITT & Colman has topped its February estimate of 1984 pre-tax profits of not less than £105m against £83·8m with £106·4m for earnings of 41·94p (36·85p).

Turnover came out at £1·12bn (£981m), reflecting real volume growth after stripping out the effects of inflation. In broad terms the British businesses performed well with significant contributions from the smaller units.

The United States side was mixed. Continental Europe was excellent and Australia, New Zealand and the Far East all did well.

The group adds that in the United States the household product development programme is well under way and will benefit significantly from December's £165m Airwick acquisition.

The final is 8·8p on July 4, making 14·5p (12·4p).

IMI

BIRMINGHAM-BASED metals and engineering group IMI has turned in better-than-expected full year pre-tax profits of £45·1m against £31·6m and is restoring the dividend to 1981 levels with a 2·5p final making 4·5p [illegible] on the year.

The drinks dispensing side continued to lead the way with profits up by a third to £1m. Other strong performances came from fluid power, up from £4·8m to £9·5m, and the almost entirely British-based engineering side which went from £2·6m to £6·5m.

A second half recovery in prices of and demand for titanium helped refined and wrought metals on from £2·6m to £4·5m but building products, hit by competition in France and the United Kingdom plastic pipe business, slipped from £7·5m to £6·6m.

Booker McConnell

BOOKER McCONNELL, currently fighting a £500m-plus bid from Dee Corporation, believes 1984 results—up from £25·1m to £36·8m pre-tax as foreshadowed—represent a springboard for further advances in profits and dividends.

The group, it says, has excellent prospects for 1985 and beyond. Booker's end-year net cash surplus amounted to £26·5m.

C. H. Beazer

C. H. BEAZER, Brian Beazer's fast-growing West Country construction concern, picked up nearly £14m on its acceptance of Consolidated Gold Field's successful counter offer for Bath & Portland Group late last year.

Beazer, which subsequently acquired Newcastle housebuilder William Leech for £26m, reports opening half pre-tax profits ahead from £4·81m to £6·61m.

Earnings come out at 20·5p (18·5p) and the interim dividend is lifted from 3·5p to 4p.

Bemrose

SECURITY printer and packaging maker Bemrose Corporation is cutting the final dividend from 7p to just a penny on May 24 for a 5·4p (11p) total.

Problems in its security printing business sent the group £109,000 into the red in the closing months, leaving full year pre-tax profits back from £5·21m to £152,000.

Brent Chemicals

IT HAS BEEN another year of solid progress for Brent Chemicals International for with trading conditions in most markets somewhat better than in 1983 all its divisions have increased both sales and profits to take the pre-tax out-turn on from £4·05m to a new peak of £4·81m.

A 2·75p final makes 3·5p (2·8p) from earnings of 7·6p (5·6p).

W. Canning

A STRONG improvement in the performance of W. Canning's chemical activities enabled the group to increase pre-tax profits from £1·35m to £1·94m in 1984.

Earnings emerge at 9·95p against 7·52p and the dividend is going up from 2·5p to 3·5p with a 2·4p final on July 1—a 3·25p total was forecast with June's £2·6m rights issue.

Croda

CRODA International has had another record year, spearheaded by Chemicals International, with pre-tax profits up by 14·1 p.c. from £17·6m to £20·05m.

Maintaining its progress of recent years, Chemicals International came out over £2m ahead at £12·2m despite the serious effect of the miners' strike on its application chemicals side. Polymers' contribution rose from £1·18m to £2·37m thanks to a significantly improved year overseas.

Delta Group

IN WHAT Delta describes as "another year of major progress," pre-tax profits rose from £31·8m to a record £45·7m. Earnings emerge at 20·9p against 15p, and a 2·68p final dividend on July 1 makes 4·5p (3·75p).

Pre-interest profits at home improved by 28 p.c. to £33·7m with overseas profits also improving by 24 p.c. to £17·4m.

Interest charges were £7·4m against £10m.

Equity & Law

EQUITY & Law reports a total distributable surplus for 1984 on its long-term funds of £60·8m, an increase of 26 p.c. over the previous year and almost double the amount for 1981.

The shareholders' entitlement, after allowing for tax relief on general annuity and pension policies, amounted to £5·35m (£4·26m).

The society is increasing the dividend from 4·5p to 5·8p, with a 4·6p final, payable July 1. Total funds under management increased by 21 p.c. to £2·51bn at end-December.

Home Charm

DO-IT-YOURSELF specialist Home Charm Group increased pre-tax profits for 1984 from £7·05m to a new peak of £10·8m on turnover of £185m against £156m.

Earnings climb from 8·5p to 13·2p and a 1·75p final dividend lifts the total to 2·75p (2p).

Iceland Foods

OCTOBER'S hugely successful new issue Iceland Frozen Foods have comfortably beaten its full year pre-tax forecast of not less than £2·8m with £2·97m (£1·82m) on a 40 p.c. sales rise to £65·2m.

There are earnings of 19·99p (12·38p) but no dividend, as foreshadowed.

Johnson Cleaners

JOHNSON Group Cleaners met its profits forecast of £6·1m pre-tax (£6·5m in 1983) made in tending on Nottingham Manufacturing and is "on course" for the £5·7m (£2·7m) forecast for the first half this year.

Final dividend is 15·42p net, making 18·6p, up 50 p.c.

Finance houses lend £9·8bn

BRITAIN'S finance houses lent a record £9·8 billion in 1984, an increase of 21 p.c., leaving the outstanding debt at the end of the year at £17·4 billion.

Lending to the consumer accounted for £4·4 billion of the total, an increase of 16 p.c. over the year and 52 p.c. over the last two years, and a third of all new cars sold in 1984 were funded by the 42 members of the Finance Houses Association.

Ian Miller, chairman, told the association's annual dinner last night that the rapid growth in consumer borrowing was encouraging more lending organisations as well as national retailers with their own credit cards to enter the consumer credit market.

"The consequence is likely to be a further growth in consumer credit, pressure on existing margins and growth in arrears and debt problems," Personal sector liabilities, he said, had doubled in five years.

Mr Miller was also critical of the "socially privileged" position building societies would have under the proposed extension of their role. His association was urging the Government to see that competition was on a fair and equal basis.

Robin Leigh-Pemberton, Governor of the Bank of England, told the association it was important that the results of extra competition should not pose undue problems for monetary control. If consumers' borrowing continued to rise sharply the resultant monetary pressure would be of major concern to the authorities.

NEW ISSUES

FKI Electricals

FKI ELECTRICALS is raising £7m net through a two-for-nine rights issue at 58p and a one-for-£1·2250 nominal convertible preference. Main shareholders are not taking up their rights.

The money will cut debts while the group looks for more acquisitions. It forecasts £5·5m pre-tax in the year to end-March against £2·26m last year.

Berkeley Group

HOUSEBUILDER Berkeley Group which only joined the unlisted security market last July, is raising £5·5m net in a one-for-four rights issue at 142p. Original placing price was 85p.

Pre-tax profits of £2·15m are forecast for the year to end-April (£1·55m). Key shareholders are placing most of their rights.

Bond Corporation

SUBSIDIARIES of the Australian Bond Corporation, which is bidding for Arnotts, the Australian food group, have started legal proceedings to stop Arnotts placing new shares with the Campbell Soup group.

Arnotts and Campbell are already associated, claims Bond Corporation, with Campbell entitled to more than 20 p.c. of Arnotts's shares. The new placing breaks Australian takover rules, Bond says.

New London Oil

AROUND £367m of investors' money has been chasing the offer for sale of 6·5m shares at 175p each in New London Oil. Some 70,000 applications were received for about 210m shares, a subscription rate of 32·5 times.

Applications for 100 to 900 shares—weighted ballot for 100; 1,000 to 7,000—weighted ballot for 200; 7,500 to 9,500—about 5 p.c. of the amount applied for; 10,000 to 245,000—about 3·5 p.c. of the amount applied for; 250,000 shares and above—4 p.c. of the amount applied for. Dealings are expected to start next Monday.

Oliver Mining

IRISH oil minnow Oliver Prospecting & Mining is to raise IR1·87m (£1·54m) in a one-for-two rights issue at IR49p (40p) and a placing of 1·65m new ordinary at a similar price.

Proceeds will meet exploration obligations of Wington Enterprises, which Oliver is to acquire.

Through the acquisition, Oliver will acquire an effective 5 p.c. working interest in an onshore concession in the eastern part of Abu Dhabi.

MONEY & EXCHANGES

THE pound took advantage of further weakness n the dollar yesterday, rising by more than one cen from $1·1702 to $1·1812 in spite of a poor set of United Kingdom trade figures.

Dealers said trading in the dollar was extremely nervous, with many investors concerned about rumours of serious American banking problems.

The pound also gained in terms of the Deutschemark but was a bit weaker elsewhere. The sterling index thus simply held steady at 75·7 in spite of the pound's improvement in dollar terms.

The cost of wholesale money in London was broadly unchanged with the key three-month interbank rate holding at 15 11/16 p.c. on the bid side. Liquidity conditions improved, with the Bank finding little difficulty in proving relief against a £650 million cash shortage in the banking system.

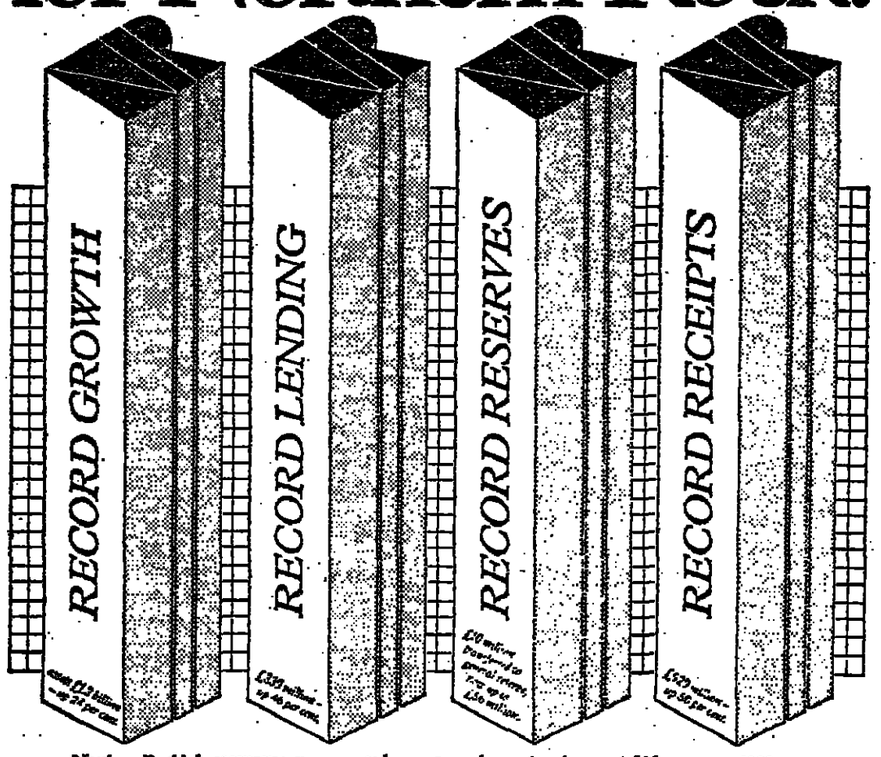
Tyndall

Record heights for Northern Rock.



Northern Rock's best ever year was reported by its Chairman, Fuller Osborn, CBE, at the Society's annual general meeting on 26 March, 1985 in Newcastle upon Tyne.

"The market in which the Society operates continued last year to be turbulent and competitive, yet Northern Rock came out of it larger and stronger than ever," he said. "I believe we have every reason for pride in our achievements."

The highlights from the year are:

RECORD GROWTH – at nearly 24 per cent, an all-time record; this compares with a 5 per cent inflation rate and represents real growth. With assets of over £1.3 billion, the Society has trebled in size in 7 years.

RECORD LENDING – a record £339 million was advanced, an increase of 46 per cent on 1983, which was itself a record year.

RECORD RESERVES – £10 million was transferred to general reserve which now amounts to £56 million, 4.27 per cent of total assets.

RECORD INVESTMENT RECEIPTS – a record £929 million was received by the Society, an increase of over 50 per cent.

"Results like these" Mr. Osborn said, "provide a first-class base for the future, with all that it promises for more radical change in the financial sector, and even greater opportunities for Northern Rock to develop its services for its members."

"We regard 1985 and beyond with renewed and well-founded confidence."

A high-profile role for the next phase of development.

Perkins Engines continues to lead the world in the design and manufacture of high-performance diesel engines. Still the industry pacesetters, we are committed more than ever to an innovative approach to manufacturing technology at a time when we are introducing an exciting range of new engine families.

For the Industrial Engineering department and its new Chief there is a crucial role to play in optimising our plant performance in terms of labour efficiency and production methods.

As leader of the existing team of engineers and a member of Manufacturing Management you will need creativity and flair to identify new techniques, as well as the ability to develop relationships with a broad spectrum of personnel at all levels.

As we enter the next phase of our manufacturing strategy, there are challenges to be faced within tight timescales on three major fronts:

Excellent package, including car, in attractive location.

* Product introductions
* Comprehensive capital replacement programme
* On-going cost-saving projects.

We'd like to hear from qualified Industrial Engineers with proven supervisory experience and up-to-date knowledge of the latest techniques and computer-based methods, who can take a leading role in improving labour efficiency and resource utilisation.

We'll tell you not only about the job and comprehensive remuneration package (which will include full relocation assistance where appropriate) but also something about the considerable attractions of Peterborough – such as one of the best shopping centres in the UK, the excellent communications, low cost housing and the beautiful surrounding countryside.

Please write enclosing a full CV detailing background, experience and current salary to Mr. A D Saunders, Personnel & Employee Relations Division, Perkins Engines, Eastfield, Peterborough PE1 5NA.

HOUSES AND ESTATES — DAVID HOPPIT

Driven under ground

IT IS refreshing to visit a development in town where cars know their place and where there is simply not room for the luxury of cul-de-sac and turning points.

In 1982 a grain merchant and a developer got together to form Usborne Developments, and their first development in Islington set the trend for subsequent schemes, with dustbins and cars kept out of view.

Recently I visited the company's development in Kensington, only a mile from Westminster. It is called Herald's Place, and like most of Usborne's work it is approached through a dramatic archway.

The archway has become another trademark of the company. They are usually embellished with a clock or some similar feature.

Herald's Place is an eclectic development, containing architectural features of numerous periods. The ample underground car park is approached through an electrically operated portcullis.

The development consists of more than 50 units which include one-bedroom flats priced from £40,000: two-bedroom houses costing from £57,500, and three-bedroom houses from £70,000. All have fitted carpets and tiny back yards (which builders insist upon calling "patios" these days).

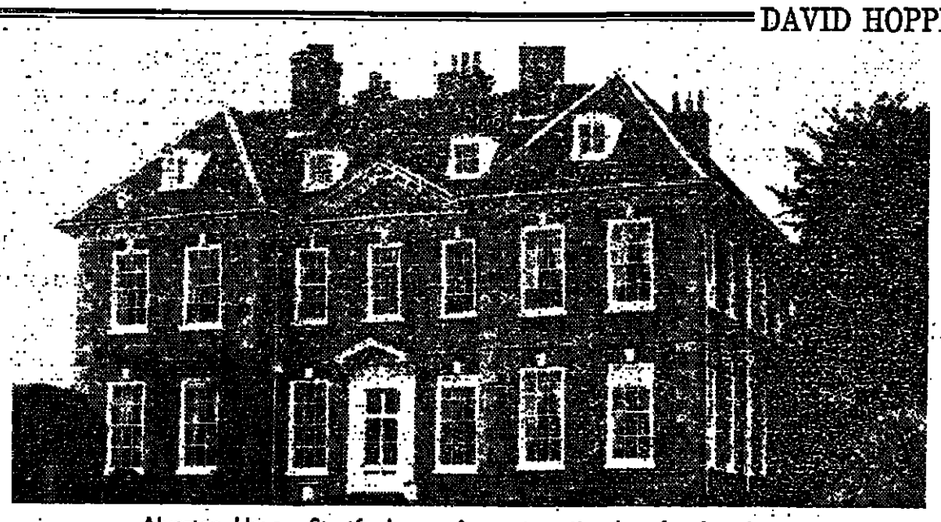
Usborne's latest offering is called Shrewsbury Mews, again approached through an archway, which consists of a total of 30 homes just off Chepstow Road, close to Bayswater Road. Here, however, the developer has had to provide individual garaging for the units. Prices start at £62,500 for a one-bedroom maisonette, rising to £115,000 or more for a three bedroom house. Faron Sutaria is agent for the development, while Daniel Smith with Townchoice are selling Herald's Place.

Where builders are able to build larger blocks of flats there is ample opportunity for keeping cars out of sight in a basement floor, and this is what Sunley Holdings has achieved at its Thameswalk studio and duplex block at Battersea.

Emphasis has been put on security, and the underground garaging is no exception, being approached by remote control entry. Each unit has a river view and wide balcony, but the builder has been somewhat limited, in my view, by some of the local authority's planning requirements, especially those relating to fire precautions.

Galleries and stairwells have had to be enclosed, and some of the bedrooms lead directly on to a shared access to the fire escapes, reducing that all-important privacy.

Prices for the 125-year leases range between £65,000 for a studio and £175,000 for a two-bedroom duplex apartment. Aylesford with Knight Frank and Rutley are the agents.



Alveston House, Stratford-upon-Avon: tempting buy for Americans.

Manor with scandalous past

WETHERINGSETT Manor, in Suffolk, was built by the rector of the parish in 1845. A later incumbent, George Wilfred Ellis, was very popular with parishioners between 1858 and 1883 until it was discovered that he was bogus, and the people he had married found their children were illegitimate. A special Act of Parliament was needed to validate the marriages.

No such scandals happen today but the village attracts many holidaymakers and a great number have enjoyed staying at the manor which has been run as a country hotel by the Retief family.

Now the family wants a rest and Savills is offering the manor and its 18 acres of parkland and woodland for around £225,000.

"It has been a challenging experience, but though the old place is in an idyllic spot it has not proved an ideal location for a hotel. It is really better suited as a nursing home, a company headquarters, or a school perhaps," Mr Eldred Retief told me.

The house has eight bedrooms, six with en-suite bathrooms, and five large reception rooms. There is a two-bedroom flat, and also a two bedroom cottage.

Shakespeare country

AMERICAN interest in British property is not confined to London. Anything close to Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwickshire, is likely to attract considerable attention and there has certainly been no shortage of interest from that continent in Alveston House, a superb William and Mary home two miles north-east of Shakespeare's town.

The 56-acre grounds include a 1,200 yard stretch of the River Avon itself. The records of the estate go back to 886, at which time it belonged to Worcester Priory, and at the Domesday survey it had a mill. Thomas Peers built the present house in 1689, and it remained in his family's ownership until 1810. The present owner is Mr Paul Heald, an American.

As well as the elegant principal house there is a coach house, a modern three-bedroom cottage, outbuildings, including stables and a boathouse, a walled garden, and a small island on the river. Hamptons, who are looking for offers around £600,000, have set a date in May for the auction but the property will almost certainly be sold before then.

For someone desiring a riverside setting but having rather less to spend there is Hartwell House, at Wroxham, in Norfolk, which has 150 foot frontage to the River Bure, together with a mooring dyke.

Although only seven miles from Norwich the property is said by Strutt and Parker to be in one of the foremost Broads locations. The house, built at the beginning of the century, has six bedrooms, plus a studio cottage. A price guide of £175,000 is given. Kenneth Shipman Balmforth and Partners are joint agents.

A Dame in a manger

DAME Agatha Christie had more vision than most of her contemporaries. Who else, in 1929, would have thought of buying a mews stable, complete with loose boxes and mangers, to convert it into a home. The cottage, (shown alongside) in Cresswell Place, South Kensington, was converted into a home for the following 35 years, and many a mystery, including "Murder in the Mews," was brewed in the attic study above the three bedrooms. Knight Frank and Rutley is now offering the house for sale, but there is no mystery about the price bracket it is in — somewhere around £245,000. Enough, perhaps, to tempt someone to commit "Evil under the sun."

DOUGHTY JOINS DE HAAN ON INJURED LIST

By HOTSPUR (Peter Scott)

NEALE DOUGHTY and Ben de Haan, who have won the last two Grand Nationals on Hallo Dandy and Corbiere, cannot ride them on Saturday because of injury. Peaty Sandy, Scotland's hope, is also injured.

Peter Scudamore was announced on Monday night as Corbiere's replacement rider. Hallo Dandy's Liverpool jockey will be settled today after yesterday's medical examination confirmed that Doughty's dislocated right shoulder would need more recovery time.

Doughty, examined in London, then made his way back to Cumbria where Hallo Dandy's trainer Gordon Richards was awaiting his views on a suitable deputy.

Available trio

Mrs Joan Richards, Gordon's wife, recalls that her husband was also faced with a similar late riding change in 1978 for Lucius, the first of his two Grand National winners.

Bob Davies replaced David Goulding on Lucius. Mrs Richards pointed out last night that several top northern riders, including Graham Bradley, running had become non-existent but left them in to ensure the return of entry and acceptance fees.

See You Then, the Champion Hurdle winner, has been withdrawn from Saturday's Sandeman Aintree Hurdle, but probables include Robin Wonder, Gaye Brief and Fredcoteri, who finished second, fourth and fifth to him at Cheltenham.

Centroline and Passage Creeper, further down the Champion Hurdle field, are other acceptors. An interesting opponent for them all will be that tough mare Rose Ravine, who beat her stable-companion Crimson Embers for the Waterford Crystal Stayers' Hurdle at Cheltenham and kept the race after a controversial stewards' decision.

Gaye Brief, whose Champion Hurdle preparation had been interrupted, will probably start favourite on Saturday. His ability to stay two miles and five furlongs was shown with a

Miss Helen Hamilton, who owns and trains Peaty Sandy in Peeblesshire, was forced to withdraw him at yesterday's declaration stage because of an injured off-hind fetlock.

Peaty Sandy finished sixth in 1983 and his success at Kelso last Wednesday had Miss Hamilton hopeful of another good run. The injury, which may have occurred in that race, has become worse rather than responding to treatment.

Peaty Sandy has now been sent to a veterinary college in Edinburgh for further X-rays and examination.

Forty-eight were left in at the Grand National's declaration stage. Mr Snugfit has comfortably escaped elimination and only the eight bottom weights are now so threatened. These include Northern Bay, winner of Cheltenham's four-mile National Hunt 'Chase two weeks ago.

The situation provides a happy contrast to last year, when 81 were left in at the four-day stage. Numerous stables realised that the chance of their horses' victory over Dawn Run in the same Liverpool race under different sponsorship two years ago.

Badsworth Boy, who has now completed a hat-trick of victories in Cheltenham's Queen Mother Champion 'Chase, heads 12 acceptors for Saturday's Captain Morgans Aintree Handicap 'Chase.

Kathies Lad, another of this month's Cheltenham winners, and Very Promising, are among those left in against Badsworth Boy, who has not found Liverpool a lucky course.

Kala Dancer, whose Dewhurst Stakes victory last autumn has made him a leading hope for this year's 2,000 Guineas and Derby, had a temperature earlier this month but trainer Ben Hanbury reports that the colt is back in work.

HOTSPUR'S "TWELVE"

None of the horses listed in Hotspur's Twelve to Follow (Flat or NH) is engaged today.

STATE OF GOING

Francome adapts to clinch hat-trick

Francome's tactical awareness has always been one of his strongest assets and yesterday, on extremely testing ground, the champion jockey employed contrasting tactics on each of his mounts.

On Clutterbuck, winner of the British Aerospace Rapier Novices' 'Chase, he was happy to sit in behind as Claude Monet set the pace. He moved his mount up into a challenging position at the final fence, contrived a fast, fluent jump at the obstacle, and took Fred Winter's promising novice six lengths clear up the run-in.

Dumper's resolution has often been called into question, but after making all the running in the Alanbrooke Memorial Handicap 'Chase, Francome's partner responded gamely when challenged on the run-in by the favourite Mount Oliver.

Easy victory

His final victory was the most easily gained. Toirdealbhach, relishing the testing ground, was on terms with his Royal Artillery Handicap 'Chase opponents much earlier than in recent outings.

Francome allowed Pat O'Connor's 11-year-old to take the lead four fences out, and from then on the race became a procession, Lulav taking second place 10 lengths behind the winner. This put Francome on the 96 mark for the season.

Although Mr Gerald Oxley, son of former trainer John Oxley, has very little racecourse experience, his winning percentage betters even Francome's, for Turn Blue made his tally three victories from just five mounts when winning the Royal Artillery Gold Cup on Turn Blue.

Oxley is serving with the 13th/18th Hussars in Germany, and flew over yesterday morning to take the mount on Bob Champion's promising six-year-old. Mr Oxley has won the last two Grand Military Gold Cups on Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother's Special Cargo.

There was a Grand National note to Leicester's Flat-race meeting yesterday when Hunter's Fen, owned by Mrs Rhonna Bigg landed the Kibworth Claiming Stakes.

Runner-up claimed

Hunter's Fen got the better of a drawn-out last-furlong tussle with Paniolo, after which the runner-up was claimed for 4,000 guineas by local bookmaker Brian Ingamells.

Steve Cauthen had a disappointing ride on 7-4 favourite Powder Blue, unplaced behind 33-1 chance Lady Eurolink in the Harborough Fillies' Stakes, but was in the winner's enclosure in the next race when Duck Flight won the Butler Handicap by four lengths from Fortune's Ring.

Course Notes & Hints

HALF ASLEEP IS BEST

By Our Course Correspondent

JOHN LOWE, who will be riding regularly for Bill Elsey this season, can get the partnership off to a winning start with HALF ASLEEP* in today's Yarm Handicap (4.15) at Catterick Bridge.

Half Asleep is a maiden on the Flat but she was a hurdles winner over this course three weeks ago.

Today's stiff test of stamina will suit Half Asleep. She may be too good for Secret Finale, another who has been hurdling recently and ran particularly well when third at Ayr earlier this month.

Shanouska, bought for 6,600gns last autumn, is fancied to show a return at the first time of asking on the Flat in the "See It Live" in Yorkshire Handicap (3.15), and Mickey Finn, whose only outing was in good-class non-plating company, may land the Forcett Park Selling Stakes (3.45).

Favoured by conditions

Shanouska has shown his best form on soft ground and is preferred to Lady Cara. Mickey Finn made his debut in the Doncaster race won by Great Reef and showed some promise to be nearest at the finish.

Sequestrator, the only runner in the Oran Maiden Stakes (4.45) with experience, may be worth following. He ran fast to beyond halfway in the race won by Running Edge at Doncaster last Thursday.

From Newmarket

BONDOE BACK ON RIGHT TRACK

By Our Resident Correspondent

Bondoe, who ran the best race of her career at Catterick Bridge last season when second to Accuracy in October, is fancied to get off the mark when she returns to the Yorkshire course for today's Yarm Handicap. The distance suits her well and she should not be troubled by soft ground.

Willie Musson's decision to bring out Sequestrator for the Oran Maiden Stakes after running on the first day of the season is worth following. National Dress, a stablemate of Bondoe, may make a winning debut in the Whorlton Maiden Stakes.

CATTERICK BRIDGE. — 4.15, Bondoe (nap), 4.45, Sequestrator, 5.15, National Dress.

Point-to-Point

Going gets tough at Ross Harriers

By DAVID WELCH

A LOT of tired horses had difficulty coping with heavy underfoot conditions on Saturday, notably at the Ross Harriers meeting at Garnons, where only four out of 25 runners put in clear rounds in the two divisions of the Maiden.

Alison Dare, who landed her fourth success of the season in the Ladies' on Mendip Express, described conditions as "terrible," and added, "the ground was extremely difficult to jump out of."

In contrast, jockeys at the Wilton meeting described the Badbury Rings surface as the best on which they had raced for some time.

Mike Felton and Simon Claisse landed doubles, and Tawny Myth, who had an unbeaten sequence in 14 races before the start of this season, returned to winning form in the Open after suffering two defeats in hunter-'chases.

Pidgeon favourite

Jenny Pidgeon remains favourite for the women riders' title after taking the Ladies' on Random Leg, but Jane McMath, sister of Flat-race jockey Sandy Barclay, is the clear leader.

Mrs McMath had her sixth win of the season, and her fourth on Mackelly, at Cottenham in the Fitzwilliam Ladies'. Sweet Diana, who finished third to Mackelly at Cottesmore a week earlier, won the Grove & Rufford Ladies' at Thorpe.

Rock Fall impressed on ground which suited him in the Fitzwilliam Open (Div. I), and the second division provided French Saint and William Sporborg with their second win in three days.

Luke Harvey, who caught the eye with his polished riding at Didmarton earlier in the season, took the riding honours at Siddington. Harvey, a pupil assistant to Tim Forster, took the V W H Adjacent on Colin Nash's Didmarton winner Game Trust, and followed up on his own stable's When In Rome in the Massey-Ferguson Maiden.

There was almost a major upset at Parham, where Colonel Henry, so impressive on the course two weeks earlier, was led into the second-last of the Crawley and Horsham Open by John Hickman-ridden Logan.

Hickman thought he was sure to win but Logan hit the top of the fence and came down, leaving Colonel Henry to win by four lengths from Compton Boy.

Saturday marked Jenny Hembrow's last appearance as a rider. She started race-riding in 1968, and had such continued success that her best season was as recently as 1982, when she finished second in the women riders' championship with 15 winners.

Mrs Hembrow was the second woman to ride in the Grand National, in 1979, and went close to becoming the first to win a race at the Cheltenham Festival, when second on Guiburn in the Cathcart Hunters' 'Chase in 1977.

She won many point-to-points and hunter-'chases on Captain Clover, with whom she chose to end her career on Saturday when he ran second in the Weston and Banwell Hunt race to Prince Milbourne.

Boat Race—April 6 (2.45 p.m.)

CAMBRIDGE PADDLE —OXFORD SPURT

By GEOFFREY PAGE

CAMBRIDGE were still suffering from sickness yesterday, though it was the president, John Garrett, rather than the earlier invalid, Broughton, who was out of the boat when they were on the water at Putney in the afternoon.

Garrett's place at seven was taken by Ewan Pearson, who rowed for Cambridge for the last three years, and the work was consigned to some quiet paddling, the crew going only as far as Hammersmith Bridge before turning and paddling back.

Oxford were out with Eton in the morning and the two crews paddled up together to Barnes Bridge before turning. Oxford put in occasional bursts of rowing, and one piece at 40 was particularly impressive.

Impressive pace

On the return journey, the crews undertook a "pyramid" of half a minute, one minute, and-a-half minutes, two minutes and down again, but Oxford, at rates of 33-34, were far too fast for the boys.

On one occasion, Oxford gained a length in 20 strokes, and on another eliminated Eton's two-and-a-half length start in 48 strokes, and since Eton were second in last week's Schools Head, this represented real pace by Oxford.

Oxford then tried some starts on their own, reaching rates of 41-42, and again the boat accelerated well. The work was generally solid, though a slight problem seems to stem from Lang at seven, who has trouble completely feathering.

In the afternoon, they were out on the top of the tide and in the absence of the A R A squad eight, rowed a two-minute piece on their own and then took on their reserves, Isis, rowing for five minutes from Craven Cottage.

Oxford, uncharitably, gave Isis only a canvas start, but on the outside of the bend it took them 19 strokes to draw level. They then forged away at 33 to finish five lengths ahead—to end a satisfactory day's work.

Gratton ready to recapture crown

By KEN MAYS

MIKE GRATTON, from Kent, now free from injury, will be all out to recapture his title when he takes part in the London Marathon, sponsored by Mars, on April 21.

Gratton, 27, who won the race in 1983 in 2 hours 9 minutes 43 seconds, dropped the title last year to Charlie Spedding, who eventually went on to collect the Olympic bronze medal in Los Angeles.

Spedding will be defending his title this year, but Gratton, a Kent Invicta runner, has now recovered from the back injury that devastated his performance in 1984 and he has been averaging 112 miles a week in training over the past three months.

Miss Rowell ran 2hr 31min. 28sec. last year, a good time, so with many of her leading rivals taking part in the World Cup marathon meeting in Hiroshima at the same time she is now among the favourites for the women's gold.

MET POLICE TOPPLED BY MERSEYSIDE

By NANCY TOMKINS

METROPOLITAN Police lost their national title to Merseyside in the Police Women's hockey championship in torrential rain at Northampton yesterday.

Met Police were denied victory when Sheila McAdams's second goal for Merseyside two minutes from ordinary time forced a 2-2 draw, and Merseyside went on to win on penalty strokes.

SIMPSON'S SKILL ON THE LINE

By Our Bowls Correspondent

Twelve players from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, plus two Crown Green champions, have been selected.

That final was more important than it may seem. There is widespread fear of open bowls following the original lawn tennis system in which players were invited on name rather than results. Now, by joining the E B P A and reaching the final of its championship, entry is automatically open.

Burrows happy

Joe Burrows, the great driving force of the north-east, is among those who are satisfied. He said: "I can see this setting up a queue of players joining the E B P A."

Duncan, a Crown Green champion, has improved greatly in the flat green game. Simpson, an England international, will need all his skills but the easy pace of the green makes for centimetre accuracy and this may tell.

Schools Soccer

Harrow unbeaten for third year

By OUR SCHOOLS SOCCER CORRESPONDENT

UNDEFEATED for the third successive year, Harrow have completed their short season and will be welcoming back seven of the present team for the next campaign. Four members are to play for the Lent Term Schools XI which meet Kent Schools at Brentwood.

Hampered by early injuries to Hill and Francis the Millfield strikers, Public Schools played constructively, but lost 1-4 in their annual fixture against a skilful F A Youth X I.

A goal by J. Chater gave John Lyon victory over St Dominic's, while Dr Challenor's G S, having recently defeated Herschel H S and Queens College, narrowly lost 1-0 to Luton Sixth Form College after a fast and entertaining game.

Westminster City were no match for Dr Challenor's and lost 1-6, but Latymer Upper, although playing fluently and dominating the match, were held to 1-1 by K C S Wimbledon. Hillon almost snatched victory for Latymer, but his last-second shot was cleared off the line.

Emson prominent

Hereford and Worcester Under-19s have qualied for the final of the South-West Region Championship for the first time. With K. Emson, an England Under-18 representative, prominent, they have only dropped one point in their league programme and in six matches have conceded two goals.

In the quarter-final replay of the E S F A Gillette Trophy Inter-Association competition, Doncaster and Southampton fought out a 5-5 result, after extra time. The eventual winners play Stockport in the semi-finals.

It took penalties for Kingsfield to beat Chipping Sodbury in the Under-16 Northavon Schools Cup, after they had drawn 1-1; Northants beat Lincolnshire 5-2 in the B H S Trophy; and Avon won 1-0 against Cornwall in the South-West Under-19 Championship.

Centenary Shield

Before last Saturday's England Under-18 programme a representative Under-18 team played a U A U XI. After 20 minutes A. Marland put the schoolboys ahead, but M. Thompson capitalised on a poor back pass to equalise.

This season's first Under-18 international — an invitation match — is against Scotland at Barnsley F C on Saturday. The Centenary Shield fixture is to be played at Dundee on Thursday, April 4.

Rugby Commentary

IRISH WILL SEE ENGLAND'S TRUE WORTH

By JOHN MASON

THE extent of England's recovery, such as it is, will be rigorously examined by high-flying Ireland in Dublin on Saturday. The prize for an Irish victory is the Five Nations' championship and the Triple Crown.

If Ciaran Fitzgerald, Ireland's captain, whose resilience is exceeded only by his determination, could have written the script himself, he would have been hard-pressed to have set a more worthy climax.

The match was originally scheduled for Jan. 19 until a snowstorm blanketted Dublin within hours of England's arrival on the Thursday. So instead of tackling them first, Ireland complete their season with a mighty tilt at English windmills.

Fitzgerald, who is about to win his 21st cap, leads his country for the 15th time. As he also had charge of the Lions in the four internationals in New Zealand in 1983, he is by far the most experienced of the national captains.

Personal achievement, though, even when the slings and arrows were falling with devilish rapidity on the 1983 tour, has not obsessed Fitzgerald. He left that to inaccurate though persistent critics with closed minds.

Not even the most purblind could deny, assuming the desire is to present a comprehensive canvas, that Fitzgerald fulfils in Irish rugby the comparable role to which Bill Beaumont grew with such distinction on England's behalf.

Major figure

The truth of the matter is that Commandant Ciaran Fintan Fitzgerald, aide-de-campe to President Hillery, is, and has been from an early point in his playing career, not only a major contemporary figure in Irish rugby but also with the game worldwide.

England go to Dublin tomorrow with every intent of ensuring that Fitzgerald's powers of leadership are tested to the full. To do that England' splayers must create a further upset in a winter of surprises—whitewash one season, the title the next, or vice-versa.

Three points from two Championship matches—the draw with France, the win over Scotland—sounds more than passable in English terms. But even the most cursory examination, I suggest, discloses fragile threads.

How have England obtained their championship points from the two matches, both at Twickenham? An intelligent never-say-die tackle by Richard Harding on Patrick Esteve over the try-line against France is one answer.

Harding's commonsense (and defiance) brought the draw, though all would accept that the long penalty goal by Andrew at the end could be rated in the same way. Against Scotland, though, a different set of circumstances existed, which were absolutely defensive.

Rory Underwood managed, with the added impetus of Simon Smith's tackle, to jiggle the ball from Iain Paxton's grasp as he was about to ground it for the match-winning try in the final *seconds. Underwood had run in*goal from the distant touch to get there, too.

Defensive acts

Two quick-thinking bold defensive acts, therefore, would seem to be the basis of England's hopes to stop Ireland on Saturday, two remarkable tackles at or over the try-line that have permitted England not to travel to Dublin in bottom place.

The assessment does not seek to denigrate England or to underestimate what Ireland must do to become the 1984-85 European champions.

Big decisions

In what has been a week of momentous decisions, bearing in mind the far-reaching matters which came before the International Board at the annual meeting, it is salutory to realise that, on the evidence available, the Southern Hemisphere will dominate world competition.

It is likely that the Irish R F U—voting figures were not disclosed—will not have viewed the forthcoming World Cup with great enthusiasm.

If, as is likely, Commandant Fitzgerald leads Ireland to vic*tory again this Saturday*, even those with entrenched views will have second thoughts.

Paul and Nicola Way shelter under an umbrella at rain-swept Sunningdale on what proved to be a miserable day in more ways than one for the couple who were beaten in the second round.

National Schools Rugby Sevens

Millfield look good for another title

By VICTOR SWAIN

MILLFIELD, winners of the open event three times in the past five years, emerged once again as strong challengers when the Rosslyn Park national schools sevens opened yesterday.

A formidable, talented and experienced side, they have already won five sevens titles — Gowerton, Taunton, Clifton, Surrey and Oxford — in their run-up to this tournament at Roehampton.

Heavy and persistent rain, which turned the pitches into a sea of mud and favoured the physically stronger teams, marred the opening day.

Wet weather tactics, with liberal use of the boot to gain ground, was the sanest method of making progress. Handling and passing were something of a lottery for even the most confident and talented sides.

Some 260 schools playing more than 540 matches are taking part in the four-day tournament, sponsored for the third successive year by Tandem Computers.

RAIN CAUSES FOURS CHAOS AT HINDHEAD

By ELIZABETH PRICE

RAIN caused chaos on the first day of the Ladies' London Foursomes at Hindhead.

Two rounds were supposed to be played, but only a few of the first-round matches were over before the persistent downpour flooded the greens and the plays were called in.

After a two-hour delay and much hard work by the green staff under Bert Cade, who cut new holes, competitors returned to resume play and the first round was able to be completed.

This all means that an extra day will be required to finish the tournament, and Hindhead have agreed to the final being played on Friday.

Four clubs did not want to go out after the rain stopped and conceded their matches. Among those to benefit from this was Harpenden, runners-up last year.

ANGUS & WARD GO THROUGH

By ROB McLEAN

The hard hitting of Willie Boone and Mark Nicholls could not upset the style of Howard Angus and John Ward in yesterday's second round of the George Wimpey Amateur Real Tennis Singles Championship at Queen's Club, West Kensington.

Angus easily defeated Boone in straight sets, after the world rackets champion, in his own inimitable style, had crashed his way to within a point of 4-4 in the first set.

Stringer returns for Twickenham final

NICK STRINGER, who tore ankle ligaments in England's victory over Rumania on Jan. 5, returns to representative rugby as Middlesex's full-back against Notts, Lincs & Derbys in the Thorn E M I County Championship final at Twickenham on April 13, writes John Mason.

Had the final been played this Saturday, as originally arranged, Stringer's match-fitness would have been in doubt, though he has had a couple of junior games at Wasps. The new date was necessary because of international postponements.

Stringer has got as far as the Vandals, the second team, this Saturday and will accompany the first team on the Easter tour of Cornwall where he will play at least one match. Middlesex have training sessions next Monday and on April 10.

The Wasps have seven representatives in the side and supply five more, including Paul Rendall, who has played on England's loosehead, for the replacements' bench. The current internationals are Simon Smith, the right wing, and David Cooke, the captain and open-side flanker.

Rees hopeful

Gary Rees, the player Cooke succeeded in England's team, expects to be fit to rejoin the Notts, Lincs & Derbys backrow. He was hurt in the John Player Special Cup match with London Welsh on Feb. 23. The team will be announced on Monday.

MIDDLESEX (v. Notts, Lincs & Derbys).—N. Stringer; S. Smith, R. Cardus (Wasps), A. Thompson (Harlequins), M. Williams; H. Davies (Wasps), I. George (London Welsh); P. Curtis, J. Olver (Harlequins), M. Hobley (Wasps), A. Ripley (Rosslyn Park), N. Roberts (Harlequins), K. Moss (Wasps), D. Cooke capt., C. Butcher (Harlequins).

STIFF MATCH FOR ENGLAND

By Our Schools Rugby Correspondent

ENGLAND, whose 16 Group side meet Italy at Twickenham this afternoon, face a far harder task than they had against Holland last Sunday.

On that occasion in Hilversum England won 56-0, including seven tries. But Italy are expected to provide strong opposition, for they won the corresponding match last season 14-9.

The event is sponsored by Phillips Petroleum, who have supported the home internationals of the 16 and 18 Groups for the past 10 years.

ENGLAND.—S. Locke (Sainbridge, Gloucester); C. Harwood (Edwards), J. Wilson (Queen's, Taunton), S. Mees (Kings, Worcester), D. Smith (Guisley); S. Painter (Kings, Taunton), B. Fealey (Cheltenham GS); A. Sharp (Henbury, Bristol), A. Heitherington (Bernard Castle), P. Drew (Richard Lander, Truro), M. Ellis (Lutterworth GS), J. Hornbin (Ryl Forest of Dean GS), R. Pool-Jones (Mings, Macclesfield), L. Conway (Dame Allen's, Newcastle upon Tyne), D. Edwards (Tunbridge Wells GS). Replacements: P. Smith (Rossall), M. Burman (Bedford Modern), N. Godfrey (Christs Hospital), J. Emmerson (Leicester GS), A. Wills (Silcoates, Wakefield), D. Dooley (Campion, Hornchurch).

At 18 Group level, more than 20 of England's possibles were seen on Sunday at Roehampton, where the provisional England side beat Rosslyn Park Colts 24-20.

Wales, whose matches in the Intermediate Group are played at under-15 level, face Scotland on Friday at Cardiff. The other engagement for Wales in this age group is a visit to Italy in the second week of April, with matches for both A and B teams.

Golf—Sunningdale Foursomes

Brave display by Bristow & Hoyles

By LEWINE MAIR

THOUGH Sunningdale could have done with better conditions in which to show off a cast embracing Walker, Ryder and Curtis Cup golfers, the first day of the club's Open foursomes tournament was never less than entertaining.

Sam Torrance and John O'Leary, the most illustrious couple afield, were soaked but still smiling at the end of the match in which they were taken to the last green of the New Course by two amateurs from West Hove, David Bristow, 20, and Tim Hoyles, 23.

O'Leary, who all but holed a bunker shot to salvage a half at the 17th, was full of praise for the way in which the amateurs had competed. "In these conditions, and bearing in mind we were only giving away two shots, it should have been no contest. However, our opponents were fantastic," he said.

Torrance, who made a 10ft birdie putt at the 18th, leaves next Wednesday to start his preparations for his first US Masters at Augusta. All of which is a far cry from those days when, in his first week as an assistant at Sunningdale, he spent his nights sleeping under the counter in Arthur Lees' shop.

On a day when David Huish and Gillian Stewart played only 25 holes to win two matches, Paul Way and his sister, Nicola, lost at the last on the Old Course to two Scottish professionals, Alastair McLean and Niall Cameron.

Admirably adept

As the only girl in the Hugh Christie School's basketball side, Miss Way was by no means worried at being the odd one out yesterday. Early on, she and her brother were admirably adept at getting each other out of scrapes but, crucially, they took two to recover from sand at the 17th.

Laura Davids and Beverley New defeated the all-professional partnership of Graham Hepsworth and Paul Laycock by seven and five.

The women, who were receiving eight shots, gave the men a tough time. Miss New holed a six-iron at the seventh to put her team four up, while the powerful Miss Davids was often as much as 20 yards past Hepsworth off the tee.

And what, in Hepsworth's opinion, made it doubly awkward was that every time it happened, his wife would call out cheerfully: "She's outdriven you again, darling!"

By TONY LEWIS
In Sharjah

PAKISTAN comfortably beat England by 43 runs and relegated them to last place in the tournament for the Rothmans Trophy played in Sharjah yesterday.

Pakistan, put in to bat, scored 175 for seven in their 50 overs, and England, always behind the run rate, were all out in the 49th over for 132.

Technically excellent, he was always easing the ball inventively with the spin and so disrupted the rhythm of Edmonds that the England spinner had to be taken off after six overs.

Vulnerable spin

The moments of England control came when Pocock and Gifford were bowling. Pocock did well to restrict the run-rate, because no more than five fielders are allowed on the leg side in this competition and an off-spinner is especially vulnerable.

Gifford was superb, wheeling away with impeccable length and considerable spin. He gave England their one glimpse of superiority when he removed Mudassar and Imran in successive balls and then Shoaib.

When England batted, Imran bowled quickly but found Fowler and Robinson in good form. Fowler was unlucky to chop a ball on to his boot and to see Javed Miandad race several yards to take a diving catch short of the off side.

Other England batsmen tried to meet the off-spin of Tauseef and Shoaib with grand strokes to the off side and were bowled.

Bailey was more flexible and played solid attacking strokes as England vainly attempted to get 71 to win off the last 10 overs.

NEW ZEALAND'S GRIM PROSPECT

By TONY COZIER
in Port of Spain, Trinidad

The brief preliminaries over, New Zealand and the West Indies start a hectic schedule of three one-day internationals and two Tests in rapid succession over the next three weeks at Queen's Park Oval today.

The second one-day international in the series of five will be followed by the first of the four Tests starting on Friday, also at Queen's Park. The teams then go to Guyana for the second Test and the third one-day international and back to Port of Spain for the fourth one-day on April 17.

The New Zealanders, on their first tour of the West Indies since 1972, have had only two three-day matches and the first one-day international as preparation, hardly adequate for an exacting challenge against opponents who have not lost a single home Test since 1978.

County Prospects

SO MUCH DEPENDS ON HADLEE

By NEIL HALLAM

TRENT BRIDGE regulars understandably bridle at any suggestion that Nottinghamshire are a "one-man band," reliant for success on Richard Hadlee, but there is no doubt that hopes for the new season hinge to a great extent on the New Zealand all-rounder's unimpaired form and appetite.

Another sustained contribution from Hadlee, who last season became the first cricketer since 1967 to perform the "double" of 100 wickets and 1,000 runs, would encourage a Notts side which last year came second in the Championship and the John Player League and reached the semi-finals of the Benson and Hedges Cup competition.

Ken Taylor, the team manager, sees no reason why the county should be any less effective this summer, or why Hadlee's own efforts should not be reproduced.

He explained: "Some players might achieve what Richard did last season and be content to sit on their reputation for a bit, but that has never been his style.

Best in championship

"He is a proud man who has always set himself targets and he is desperately keen to win another trophy. As far as Richard is concerned, the 'double' was not just an achievement but also something he has to live up to.

"He's a thoroughbred, not a workhorse, and so long as we don't expect him to wear himself down when there's nothing in it for him, there is no reason why he should not continue to prove he is the best cricketer in the Championship."

With Mike Hendrick forced to retire and Clive Rice no longer in the bowling armoury, Taylor recognises a lack of consistent penetration elsewhere in the seam attack.

He commented: "With another world-class strike bowler, I would back us for anything. My mouth still waters at the thought of Hadlee, Hendrick and Rice together in their prime, but it wasn't to be."

WILLIAMS TRIES AGAIN

By PHIL LIGGETT

JEFF WILLIAMS, 26, from Stockport, who crashed out of the Sealink International five-day race almost a year ago when lying fourth, has been given the chance to make amends in this year's event when he was named for the Great Britain team yesterday.

The selectors have relied heavily on past experience in naming Phil Bateman, Darryl Webster, Peter Longbottom, Phil Wilkins and recent Grand Prix of Essex winner Alan Gornall, for the race starting at Rotherham on April 15.

More experienced

Peter Sanders, 10th last year, was an obvious choice for the first team but he has been put in the England squad, possibly because he annoyed Jim Hendry, the national team director, when he refused to ride the Grand Prix of Essex after it had been shortened because of snow on the course.

Nick Barnes, 20, from Dartford, is an interesting newcomer to the England team and has earned his place with his fifth in the Essex. Paul Watson, from Milton Keynes, a surprise 14th in last year's Milk Race and fourth last Sunday in the Eastbourne-London is another deserving selection.

Webster, fourth last year—like Sanders he rode in the Team Time Trial in the Olympic Games—said: "I aim to be right up there again this year and I won't be making the same tactical mistakes—I'm more experienced now."

GREAT BRITAIN. — P. Bateman (Leeds), A. Gornall (Clitheroe), P. Longbottom (York), D. Webster (Walsall), P. Wilkins (Nottingham), J. Williams (Stockport).

LINEKER AND STEVEN EDGE ENGLAND HOME

By DONALD SAUNDERS

England ...... 2, Republic of Ireland 1

ENGLAND paid dearly for the satisfaction of earning their fourth consecutive victory in a friendly against the Republic of Ireland at Wembley last night when Bryan Robson, their captain, and Mark Hateley, another key World Cup player, were both injured during the second half of an untidy match.

The small crowd were given scant reward for turning out on a cold, wet, blustery night during much of the first half, which developed into a mad scramble between two teams who appeared to have little understanding of each other's play.

Much of his work was wasted, largely because the new striking partnership of Hateley and Lineker were nort nearly sharp enough to unsettle Lawrenson and McCarthy, at the centre of the Irish defence, and Waddle and Steven could make little progress along the flanks.

Bonner alert

Then, five minutes later Sansom cut in from the left, decided to have a go himself from the edge of the box and saw his firmly-hit shot tipped over the bar by the alert Bonner.

Although England took the game to their opponents for most of the first half, Brady still managed to let Arsenal fans in the stadiu msee that he is as skilful and shrewd as ever.

Eventually England's steady pressure earned its reward in the final seconds of the first half when Butcher's lowish cross was headed on by Hateley and confidently placed beyond Bonner's reach by Steven for his first goal on his second England appearance.

The Irish left McGrath in the dressing room at the start of the second half, pushed Lawrenson into midfield and sent on O'Leary to fill the vacancy at the heart of the defence.

The switches almost brought success in the 51st minute when Lawrenson opened up England's defence with a well-placed pass to Waddock, who took the ball on a pace or two, then drove it just wide.

Soon, however, England began to take command again, pushing forward persistently though rarely with sufficient combined skill to outwit O'Leary and his colleagues.

Then, in the 66th minute, misfortune struck Robson, their captain, yet again. He was hurt in a tackle by O'Keefe and was helped off, carrying his left boot in his hand.

Robson's departure gave Hoddle the chance to leave the substitute's bench and press his claim for a place in the World Cup side and the Irish pulled off the ineffective Whelan in the 69th minute and replaced him with O'Callaghan.

Hateley soldiered on painfully until the 71st minute and then limped off to the dressing room with the luckless Robson.

Davenport, the young Nottingham Forest striker, left the bench to make his first appearance for England and within five minutes had left his mark on the match by supplying a well-judged pass to Lineker, who took the ball on and flicked it past Bonner to earn the distinction of scoring in his first full game.

With barely a couple of minutes remaining the large Irish contingent in the crowd at last had something to cheer about when Brady collected a pass just outside the penalty box, cut in towards goal, his the ball low from an acute angle and saw it pass under Bailey's elbow into the net.

ENGLAND. — Bailey (Man. Utd), Anderson (Arsenal), Sansom (Arsenal), Steven (Everton), Wright (Southampton), Butcher (Ipswich), Robson (Man. Utd), Wilkins (AC Milan), Hateley (AC Milan), Lineker (Leicester), Waddle (Newcastle).

REPUBLIC OF IRELAND. — Bonner (Celtic); Hughton (Tottenham), Beglin (Liverpool), Lawrenson (Liverpool), McCarthy (Man. City), Brady (Inter-Milan), Whelan (Liverpool), Waddock (QPR), O'Keefe (Port Vale), Stapleton (Man. Utd), McGrath (Man. Utd).

Brady's class tells at top level

IT remains one of football's great mysteries why Liam Brady should need to mark his 50th cap by answering the slur that he cares little for the challenge... international soccer.

The Dublin-based cynics ignore Brady's transformation from Irish prodigy to polished European professional when they question his commitment to playing in the green shirt of the Republic.

Brady takes the sourness with a wry smile. He can still remember the bewilderment he felt at the age of 15 when, in their wisdom, the fathers who ran St Aidan's Christian Brothers' Schil expelled him for daring to captain Ireland's schoolboy soccer team instead of playing for them in a Gaelic football fixture.

Influence felt

Wembley, cold and damp, was hardly the ideal stage for him to underline his accelerated development in the four years since he left Highbury for lucrative exile in Italy.

Yet, after making a careful assessment of the pace of the game, the Inter-Milan midfield player, wearing his dark hair slicked back in Mediterranean fashion, made his influence felt by finding space which was beyond the vision of his colleagues.

It was a tribute to Ray Wilkins' contribution for England that he stood comparison to his Irish opponent, but Mark Hateley, the game's other player in the game who earns his living in Milan, did not share their technique.

For all the lavish praise, Hateley is still a relative novice at international level. But Bobby Robson would have been heartened by the goal from Trevor Steven on the stroke of the interval.

The game was also valuable because it provided a much-needed opportunity for some of his young players to gain representative experience. But, despite a sizeable crowd of Irish supporters, an England international at Wembley once again lacked atmosphere.

MICHAEL CALVIN

Jones urges Wales to turn clock back

By ROGER MALONE

WALES tonight ask Joey Jones, Chelsea's versatile defender, to try and fill their problem position of centre-half, in the crucial World Cup qualifying tie against Scotland, who start as favourites at Hampden Park.

And Jones, 30, with 62 previous caps at full-back and two in central defence three years ago, will be asking his team to turn the clock back 10 months and eight matches.

At Wrexham last May, Jones was a proud and hard-tackling left-back in the side which beat England 1-0, with an excellent goal by Mark Hughes, who was making his debut.

"That was the last time we played well. It has got to be a performance like that if we are to get the result we need against this Scottish side," said Jones last night, after looking back on only one Welsh win in their last seven games.

Hansen on bench

The size of tonight's Welsh task can be gauged by Scotland enjoying the luxury of a centre-back of Hansen's quality being on their substitutes' bench. The Liverpool defender would surely get into any other British team.

"Quality" is the word continually on Sock Stein's lips, as he predictably recalls Dalglish and Nicol, both missing with a virus from last month's 1-0 defeat in Spain, after the Liverpool pair had starred in home victories over Spain and Iceland in Group Seven.

Mr Stein, Scotland's manager, relishes this season's proof that in Dalglish, Souness, McStay and Cooper, he has highly-skilled men, capable of creating a goal for themselves or somebody else, at any moment.

Wales have two attacking players in that class, Rush and Hughes, and two quality defenders in Southall and Ratcliffe.

The Welsh task is to contain Scotland's high-calibre attacking players, and yet get into Scotland's half often enough, and in sufficient numbers, to supply Rush and Hughes with a suitable service.

Praise from Souness

Scotland's inspirational captain, Souness, last night complimented the young Welsh strikers. "It's hard to think of a better pair in Britain or in Europe," he said. The key, for us, will be shutting down on those two."

If McLeish and Miller, with assistance from the nearest other Scots, subdue Rush and Hughes, and Souness, McStay and Bett command midfield, scope ought to arise for the cunning Dalglish to combine with Johnston and Cooper for goals to arrive.

Scottish victory would have them, as Mr Stein says, "well on the road to Mexico." A Welsh win or draw would transform their qualifying chances from lean to healthy.

Drinkell could add punch for Watford

GRAHAM TAYLOR'S search for the players to secure Watford's First Division survival is expected to take him to Grimsby, the club he used to captain, writes Michael Calvin.

He retains an interest in Ray Houghton, the Fulham midfield player whose contract expires in the summer, but there was widespread speculation last night that he is set to augment his attack with Kevin Drinkell.

The Grimsby striker has 99 senior goals to his credit yet, despite his initial promise, he has been overshadowed by the pairing of Gary Lund and Paul Wilkinson, who scored his first goal for England's Under-21 team in Monday's 3-2 win over Eire.

Meanwhile Wigan, who are likely to select their new manager from a five-man short-list tomorrow, have sold Steve Johnson, their 16-goal leading scorer, to Bristol City for £30,000.

Portsmouth, poised to complete the free transfer signing of Ivan Golec from Southampton, have accepted a £20,000 offer from Bolton for Dave Bamber, who has played only twice since his transfer from Walsall. The striker has asked for time to consider his position.

Keith Peacock, Gillingham's manager, yesterday signed Derek Hales. Charlton's experienced striker, and Arthur Cox, the Derby manager, thanked Brian Clough for sanctioning the third month of Steve Sutton's loan period at the Baseball Ground.

Allan Harris made a pertinent contribution to the debate over Terry Venables's future yesterday by insisting they intend to stay at Barcelona for next season's European Cup challenge.

GLOOM FOR SWANSEA

By A Special Correspondent

Swansea ... 1 Millwall ... 2

Swansea City were pushed nearer to relegation from Division Three after their defeat by Millwall, but there was at least no trouble on the terraces. The police presence outnumbered the 100 Millwall supporters by about three to one.

On the field, however, three Millwall players were booked quicky by referee Baker, and there were two goals in the first half, which proved that some football was being played.

Brilliant equaliser

There was a spate of Swansea injuries, four men receiving attention after some heavy clashes but, a minute before the interval, a brilliant equaliser was netted by Marustik after Waddle, Pascoe and Powell had cut through the Millwall defence.

McDonnell close to title chalenge

By KEN MAYS

JIM McDONNELL, the unbeaten Stepney featherweight, moved a step nearer to a British title challenge when he won the Southern Area title by easily out-pointing Clyde Ruan, of Croydon, over 10 rounds at Wembley Arena last night.

McDonnell, 24, a former A B A champion who turned professional after winning a Commonwealth Games silver medal at lightweight, produced a performance that brought a verdict of 99½ points to 96½ points from refree Harry Gibbs.

There was never any doubt once the contest got moving in the early stages that Ruan, beaten in four rounds by Barry McGuigan in his last contest when he challenged for the British title, had met his match.

To his credit, he took the fight to the challenger throughout, but suffered a cut right eyebrow for his aggressions as early as the second round and although the injury did not hamper his performance the sharp combination punching of his opponent did.

Ruan, a stylish performer having his 24th contest, did not appear to possess the knowledge how to avoid his five months younger opponent's punching and he seemed bewildered at times by the way McDonnell managed to put his punches together.

Despite his injury Ruan never let up on the attack, but once the injury appeared he committed himself to scoring, leaving himself open to the counter-attack.

Rousing finish

McDonnell, another of the Terry Lawless stable who was having his 14th contest, also suffered a cut across the left eyebrow, bu the experience in his corner never let it bother him fro mthen on.

It was the incentive that Ruan needed, but McDonnell was so determined from the start of the sixth that it became a punch-for punch affair with little regard for defence. Yet it was always the challenger who came out on top.

Ruan, who had lost to McGuigan in four rounds in Belfast last year, tried all ways to get through the tight defence of McDonnell, but he always came out second best.

Despite a rousing final two rounds in which Ruan was boxed to a standstill there was no hesitation on the part of Mr Gibbs to give the younger challenger a victory by seven rounds to one with two even.

McGUIGAN TRIUMPHS

Barry McGuigan last night retained his European featherweight championship when the challenger, Farid Gallouze, of France, was stopped in the second round at Wembley Arena.

SIMMONS & WIGG FINED AND BANNED

By JOHN GATES

MALCOLM SIMMONS, of Swindon, and Simon Wigg, of Oxford, were yesterday suspended from international events for this season by a Speedway Control Board disciplinary tribunal in London.

They were found guilty of conduct prejudicial to the sport, after having the previous day been found not guilty of bribery and inducement charges.

Simmons, 39, and Wigg, 24, were each fined £1,000 with £900 costs and banned from all F I M events for 1985—the World Individual Championship, World Team Cup and World Pairs Championship.

Mark Courtney, 24, of King's Lynn, was also found guilty of conduct prejudicial to the sport and suspended from racing in Britain until May 1. He was also fined £250 with £200 costs.

John Louis, 44, the former Halifax, King's Lynn and Ipswich rider who now hold an administrative post with Ipswich, was found not guilty of conduct prejudicial to speedway.

The tribunal was a sequel to a series of articles in a Sunday newspaper last autumn, in which it was claimed irregularities had occurred during qualifying meetings for last year's World Championship.

HIRD DENIES PLYMOUTH

Plymouth ... 2 Burnley ... 2

BURNLEY gained a criticial away point in their battle aaginst relegation as they fought back to earn a draw with a late penalty by Hird at Plymouth, after being set back by the explosive Tommy Tynan, who scored twice in the first 21 minutes to bring his season's tally to 25 goals.

Tynan began with a 10th-minute penalty after Hutchison had upended Hodges. In the 21st minute Tynan shot home from close range after good work by Nisbet.

Burnley hit back three minutes later. The unmarked Biggins received a crossfield pass from Grewcock and cut in on to shoot past Crudgington.

Lawrence chance

Fine saves by Crudgington kept out shots from Devine and Biggins. Then Lawrence, a 58th-minute substitute for Grewcock, failed with a chance created by Phelan, the hard-working midfielder.

Burnley's efforts were rewarded 12 minutes from the end, when Kevin Hird scored his 21st goal of the season with a penalty after Phelan had been fouled by Uzzell.

CHARLTON IN LAST EIGHT

By JANICE HALE

Eddie Charlton, after leading 4-1, eventually took the deciding frame to beat Dennis Taylor 5-4, to reach the quarter-finals of the Benson and Hedges Irish Masters at Goffs, Kill, Co. Kildare, yesterday.

Taylor, perhaps suffering some reaction following his part in Ireland's capture of the Guinness World Cup on Saturday, eventually managed to capitalise on his chances to win the fourth frame before Charlton went three up with four to play.

But with breaks of 32, 57 and 48 Taylor was able to restrict Charlton's scoring to only 32 points in the next three frames to force the match to the decider.

Taylor was unable to maintain that momentum and when he failed to make contact with the cluster of reds early in the ninth, Charlton made a frame-and match-winning 60 to earn his first win of the year.

1ST RD.—E. Charlton (Australia) bt Dennis Taylor (Blackburn) 5-4. Frames: 104-12, 75-26, 77-37, 5-48, 66-35, 4-66, 0-93, 28-73, 82-7.

Sports Council

'£8m FUND GAP AFTER GLC BAN'

By PAT BESFORD

THE Sports Council estimates that around £8 million, plus the cost of "imponderables" will be needed to replace the sports funding which comes from the Greater London Council and the six other Metropolitan County Councils due to be abolished in April, 1986.

This money is required for what are described as "wider than local interest" facilities and activities which cannot be transferred to particular smaller borough and district authorities.

Some outgoings have been identified, such as the G L C half-share costs of running the National Sports Centre at Crystal Palace—estimated at £810,000 a year.

Subject to the final passing of the Bill, the third reading of which is today and tomorrow, the Sports Council will receive additional funding to enable it to assume full responsibility for the Centre.

Unknown factors

Also in the £8 million is the cost of setting up the planned five new "centres of excellence," covering the 32 London boroughs.

It is in the area of "imponderables" that the Sports Council's survey, based on its own independent researches and described as the most detailed and responsible report on the subject, has no figures.

John Wheatley, the Council's director, said: "We have had to work completely in the twilight because the G L C and the other metropolitan county councils have refused to give us any information.

"We have had to go back to the Department of the Environment, who asked us to produce estimates and have more power to get the information denied to the Sports Council."

7 40 MONKEY BUSINESS—Natural history quiz.

8 10 DALLAS—Back—by public demand, no less—the Southfork folk head into their final laps on BBC, before falling prey to the mercies of ITV's schedule planners. Jenna is still charged with shooting Naldo, and Patrick Duffy, who plays Bobby, directed this one. (Ceefax.)

9 00 PARTY POLITICAL BROADCAST. By the Conservatives.

9 05 NEWS, WEATHER.

9 30 Q.E.D.—The Long Watch. Fifty Years of radar, marked by William Woollard with a rather pedestrian report that fails to plot the excitement of the original discovery, back in 1935, perhaps because it was virtually accidental. Sadly, only Arnold Wilkins survives from the early pioneers, who had such wonderful names as Watson Watt, A. P. Rowe, Harry Boot and Mr Wimperis of the ministry. But the film uses some fine wartime colour footage and rightly takes pride in this vital British invention.

10 00 SPORTSNIGHT—Athletics (the Newcastle City Centre 5,000, promising Seb Coe and marathon man Steve Jones) and last night's boxing bill, Frank Bruno, Barry McGuigan.

11 05 ★THE VISIT—The Boy David Trilogy begins a nightly re-run, recalling how Scottish surgeon Ian Jackson took an abandoned Peruvian boy into his hospital and then into his home. Disease had destroyed the lad's face to a grotesque degree. Jackson is now rebuilding it. Desmond Wilcox had merely to point his camera. (Ceefax.) 12.05 a.m. Weather.

5 30 "HOW THE WEST WAS WON" (1962). The vast, sprawling, definitive western, narrated by Spencer Tracy, directed by John Ford, George Marshall and Henry Hathaway and played by whoever was available, including Messrs Fonda, Malden, Peck, Stewart, Wallach, Wayne and Widmark. The fate of a family of pioneer folk over three generations mirrors the settlement of the American west. Carroll Baker and Debbie Reynolds also lead, though it's a bit of a squeeze on the small screen.

8 10 RENOIR—"What Are Paintings For, Anyway?" An appreciation of the great Impressionist, to tie in with the impressive collection of his sun-blessed work at the Hayward Gallery in London.

9 00 ★OSCAR—Trials. Middle section of John Hawkesworth's classy drama of the life and forbidden love of Oscar Wilde follows the disastrous court case brought by the play*wright against his dear friend Bosie's brutal father, the* Marquis of Queensberry. Norman Rodway plays the thuggish peer, Ronald Pickup his devious attorney and Michael Gambon an elegant Oscar, about to be sacrificed on the altar of Puritan England. The conclusion follows tomorrow. (Ceefax.)

9 55 OPEN SPACE—It's a RIP Off. The callous exploitation of mourners and the insensitivity of bureaucrats.

8 30 THERE COMES A TIME . . . Cedric the computer threatens to supplant expiring executive Andrew Sachs. (Oracle.)

9 00 ★★THE LAST PLACE ON EARTH—The pitiful, tattered symbolic remains of a British flag fly forlornly in the freezing polar winds. The crippled, ragged remains of Scott's frost-bitten band limp mournfully toward it and their bitter end in a concluding episode at times almost too wretched to watch. Wherever the truth lies buried between the poles of patriotic legend and writer Trevor Griffiths's revisionist reappraisal this stunning, sad, episode seals the award-worthy fate of a production that has been as technically and artistically impressive as it has been historically controversial. Make-up man Tommy Mandserson is the unsung hero here. (Oracle.)

U.S. ANGRY AT KILLING BUT NOT PROVOKED

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

THE Reagan Government continued to express anger yesterday about the killing in East Germany on Sunday of an American Army officer, but appeared to be unwilling to let the incident interfere with the recent improvement in relations with Moscow.

A State Department spokesman said that Washington was disgusted with an official Soviet account of the incident, in which Major Arthur Nicholson was shot and killed by a Soviet soldier guarding military installations in East Germany.

The Russians, who said that Major Nicholson was spying, had merely compounded the "inexcusable killing" with a tendentious account of what happened, he said.

Other officials said that while there was no excuse for the killing, it was unlikely that Washington would allow the confrontation to set back the gradual thaw in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

President Reagan had said that such an occurence only made it more

They pointed out that President Reagan had said that such an occurence only made it more important for him to hold a summit meeting with Mr Gorbachev, the Soviet leader.

President Reagan telephoned Major Nicholson's widow, Karyn, in Frankfurt yesterday to express his condolences. Mrs Nicholson is expected to accompany the body of her husband in a United States Air Force flight to America today.

'Licensed spying'

Although the Americans are denying that Major Nicholson was inside a restricted military zone when he was shot, there has been no attempt to discount the Soviet charge that he was photographing military installations.

Major Nicholson was a member of the 14-man American military liaison mission stationed at Potsdam whose job it is to collect data on Communist military dispositions inside East Germany.

What has angered the Americans is that in killing the officer the Russians were not "playing by the rules" by which the Allied military missions carry out "licensed spying" in East Germany, while the Russian mission does the same in West Germany.

The most charitable explanation being given in Washington is that Major Nicholson was spotted by a "trigger-happy" Soviet sentry who did not follow the customary procedure of simply shooing him away.

Major Nicholson was apparently trying to photograph tank sheds near the town of Ludwigslust when he was challenged.

The Americans are also angry over the delay in getting medical help. Major Nicholson's driver, Sgt Jesse Schatz, was prevented from giving first aid, being held by the Russians at gunpoint inside his car.

One American source said: "You can't call this man a spy because the ground rules for the operation of the mission are quite specific. It's all very visible. The men assigned there have to carry a special identification card and everybody knows who they are."

Maj Nicholson, 37, was said by colleagues to have been one of the "best and brightest" of the Russian-speaking specialists assigned to the Patsdam mission. He had carried out many intelligence - gathering missions in East Germany, they said.

A former mission member said that while the men's duties were usually seen as "routine" daylight operations, sometimes they became very risky night-time forays.

"We'd go in at 90 mph between 11 at night and one in the morning to try to keep the Russians from seeing where we were going," he said. "It's a very dangerous job. It doesn't surprise me that someone was killed. I'm surprised it wasn't happened before."

Shooting defended

Maj. Nicholson and his driver ignored clearly visible warning signs in ussian and German when they drove on to the Soviet military facility to conduct an "espionage operation," Tass said.

American Servicemen had committed "such unlawful acts before, Tass claimed. Members of the American mission caused grievous injuries to a Soviet officer they "deliberately ran down" while engaged in military reconnaissance in a restricted zone in 1982 the report said.

'SHOOT FIRST'

Russian policy

Air Cdr G. S. Cooper, Defence Staff, reports: Mr Caspar Weinberger, American Defence Secretary, told defence ministers attending the Nato Nuclear Planning Group meeting in Luxembourg yesterday that "the murder" of Maj. Nicholson revealed yet again the Russian mentality of shoot first and investigate later, which had shocked the world at the time of the shooting down of the Korean Airlines' ocing 747.

'LEGITIMATE VISIT'

Tank sheds

MICHAEL TARR reports from Bonn: Maj Nicholson was on a legitimate visit, observing Soviet tank sheds, American sources in Germany said yesterday.

"He was near, but not on, restricted ground," the sources added.

Maj Nicholson, a fluent Russian-speaker, was standing outside a Soviet military installation at Ludwigslust, near Schwerin, where Soviet missiles are believed to be installed, looking at tank sheds when he was shot and killed on Sunday it was said.

The services were not able to confirm that he had been taking pictures, though they noted that this was an accepted practice by members of the missions of the three Western war-time allies stationed near Potsdam, and the Russians accredited to the British, American, and French commanders-in-chief in respectively Bunde Frankfurt and Baden-Baden in the West.

"They take pictures of our installations and equipment and we take pictures of theirs, though pictures cannot be taken in designated restricted areas," the sources said.

THATCHER'S SOVIET TALKS 'USEFUL'

By Our Political Staff

She described their discussions as "good and useful" and added: "He touched briefly on relations between our two countries and agreed that we should develop contacts in a wide variety of fields so that we could achieve a better understanding and thus contribute towards an improvement in East-West relations.

"I stressed the hope of the Government and people of the United Kingdom that the Geneva arms talks would be successful and result in increased security at a lower level of weapons."

U.S. considers tougher reprisals

By DAVID SHEARS in Washington

PROSPECTS of American counter-terrorist military action against selected targets in Iran loomed larged yesterday after a speech by Mr Robert McFarlane, White House National Security Adviser.

"We should be prepared to direct a proportional military response against bona fide military targets in a State which directs terrorist action against us," Mr McFarlane said.

In the past, notably during the 1979-80 embassy hostage-taking crisis in Teheran and the more recent truck bombings of United States Marines and diplomats in Lebanon, America has been hamstrung in taking retaliatory action by its inability to pinpoint suitable targets.

But in his speech to a defence forum Mr McFarlane said that in deciding to retaliate it would not be necessary to have "absolute evidence that the targets were used solely to support terrorism.

"Nor should we need to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that a particular element or individual in that State is responsible for such terrorist acts."

His remarks were seen by American commentators as lowering the threshold at which America might launch reprisal strikes. He seemed to be going even further than Mr George Shultz, Secretary of State, whose outspoken remarks on the need for anti-terrorist reprisals aroused controversy some months ago.

He said the us of force must be an option even if it threatened innocent bystanders being used as a shield by terrorists.

LEVY 'NO' VOTE

as a "tactical mistake" by many Left-wingers, who felt that if the union started paying the wages of sacked men it would divert effort from the campaign to get them reinstated.

There had been considerable feeling at many pits last week, when the ballot was conducted, that the N U M should not give money to men who could have been responsible for some of the violence during the strike.

Mr Peter Heathfield, the union's general secretary, described the result as "disappointing, but not unexpected."

Mr Tony Morris, a spokesman for the National Working Miners' Committee, said it was a vote "against Scargillism," adding: "The best thing Mr Scargill can do is stop where he's welcome — in Moscow."

Mr John Glen, 49, N U M branch secretary at Monktonhall colliery, near Edinburgh, one of 46 miners sacked at the pit, said he was "very disappointed. The only alternative now is pithead collections for sacked miners."

The ballot, conducted by the Electoral Reform Society, was the first opportunity the N U M executive had given its membership to vote since the start of the national strike last year, when they wer edenied a poll.

In the four years since Mr Scargill became president, the Left has only won one ballot—Mr Heathfield's narrow election victory just before the strike started.

The latest defeat will strengthen the arm of the moderates who want the overtime ban imposed on Oct. 31, 1983 called off. It was instituted in protest at a 5·2 per cent. wage offer linked to pit closures.

Miners have not received a pay rise for two years, and the Coal Board is refusing to negotiate until the ban is lifted and normal working resumed.

Nottinghamshire miners, who are already working normal overtime, announced that Mr Roy Lynk, their newly-appointed acting general secretary, is to run against Mr Mick McGahey, Left-wing leader of the Scottish miners, for the post of national vice president in the summer. If he is successful, Mr Scargill could find himself with a moderate No. 2.

FAMOUS GROUSE SHOT AT

By EDWARD PEARCE

AS a working rule Mrs Thatcher is not exactly La Roche-Foucauld, nor indeed Joe Miller, but she scored rather sweetly yesterday when Mr Derek Fatchett (Lab., Leeds C) asked the predictable question about cuckoos.

"What other bird species troubled the divided Conservative party?"

"None," said Mrs Thatcher, disregarding the refrigerated features of Mr Heath. "Apart, that is, from the odd grouse."

However, an accession of wit has not improved the Prime Minister's spoken English.

In less than 90 seconds she spoke of us having played "a very leading part" in something or other, presumably the E E C, and proclaimed herself in favour of "free-up trade," at which she sat down and made way for the Minister of Education.

Sir Keith these days has things very much the way he wants them. Partly this is because his White Paper on exams, assessment and standards was genuinely well received.

Partly because he has developed a relaxed style — that to the kindly don who had rather hoped for a more sophisticated contribution to his tutorial.

For the Opposition Mr Radice finds himself trying to be unpleasant by numbers. Since it does not come naturally to him, his grasp of prose style blasted upwards, achieved lift-off and ran slowly along the ground.

'Empty words'

"The 64,000 dollar question," "getting a quart out of a pint pot," "ringing hollow," "empty words," "peace initiative" and "fiddling while Rome burns," said the Opposition spokesman on education.

Otherwise Sir Keith was not troubled except perhaps by the sycophantic Mr Key, a man who would have been thought over the top at the court of Louis XIV.

Mr Key is P P S to M. Heath, which is rather like being ambassador to Ninevah or harbour master of Dunwich (if anybody asks, Dunwich has been under water since 1450). That does not stop him buttering his bread on both sides with gross flattery of Sir Keith.

The White Paper, a very sensible and helpful affair, does not benefit from being described as "the greatest development since the 1944 Act."

By contrast the butter applied by Mark Fisher was rancid. "Did the Minister realise," he asked, "that teachers felt undervalued and unwanted?"

Hardening hearts

There is something about the plight of teachers which brings out the worst in all of us. Somehow they repel without frightening. The creak of hardening hearts could be heard on all sides.

Yet such rituals apart, Sir Keith's proposals were not received as they would have been 10 years ago as elitist reaction or a vicious attack on a fine body of men. Mr Radice thought them a trifle obvious.

Labour, knowing its ground, is readily indignant about the quantity of text books and the state of classrooms.

But on the modes of education, concerning which its mildest members once carried flaming torches to burn down grammar schools and institute the kingdom of Crosland on earth, it is fascinatingly mute, quibbling at the margins of rational argument.
